CLASSIC CAMERA LEICA III f

A LEGEND RETURNS

... the MINOX Classic Camera Leica III f

The miniature format Leica III f. MINOX has faithfully recreated the original on a scale of 1:2,5 and the result can be seen for itself. Even at first glance, this photographic jewel, set in a fine wooden case, is a little sensation. But the inner values of the Leica III f Classic Camera also shine through. It uses the well-known MINOX 8x11 mm film and is not only fully-functional, but also achieves excellent photographic results using the Minotar 1:5.6/15mm lens (3 lens elements in 3 groups). And thanks to the optional flash unit, you can even take photos with this miniature camera in poor light conditions.

In summary: Because a true classic never dies, the legendary Leica III f will be brought back to life in the MINOX format.

Oskar Barnack, the inventor of Leica, in his studio

Once upon a time in 1950:

Two fantastic developments conquered the market. One was the Leica III f camera, with which the global Leitz brand launched one of the most successful cameras. With sales of 70,000, this elegant masterpiece became a classic and made photographic history not least because of its distinctive design. The other was the legendary MINOX miniature camera, in which the inventor Walter Zapp, who is now 95 years old, combined 375 individual parts into a sensational unit.

Like nothing else, the MINOX camera proves that magnificent technology can work in a minimal amount of space. As an example of miniaturisation personified, this masterpiece started its triumphant world-wide progress at the beginning of 1950 and now it enjoys a status as one of the most unusual cameras with international popularity. In the meantime, the MINOX brand has become a subsidiary of Leica and this convenient link inspired MINOX to create an unusual new edition.
