Oskar Barnack,
the inventor of
Leica, in his studio

Two creations which went down in history: Leica If and the MINOX miniature camera

A Leica is always more than just a camera, as its inventor again proved with the Leica If. This classic camera was first presented in 1951 and production continued up until 1956. The Leica If is a simplified version of the Leica II f, which does without the viewfinder and rangefinder. The first edition in 1951 brought out 2,200 cameras and a further 15,000 were made between 1952 and 1956.

And what about MINOX? For a long time this name, whose triumphant progress also began in the early 1950s, has been synonymous with miniature cameras. The creation of the genius Walter Zapp, now 96, provides unparalleled evidence of how 375 individual components can be combined into a sensational (small) unit.

More information about the history of MINOX / Leica as well as of the Classic Cameras you will find in the book "MINOX Classic Camera Collection", approx. 120 pages, hardback, English and German language.
