

A Journal of the Gesellschaft Deutscher Chemiker

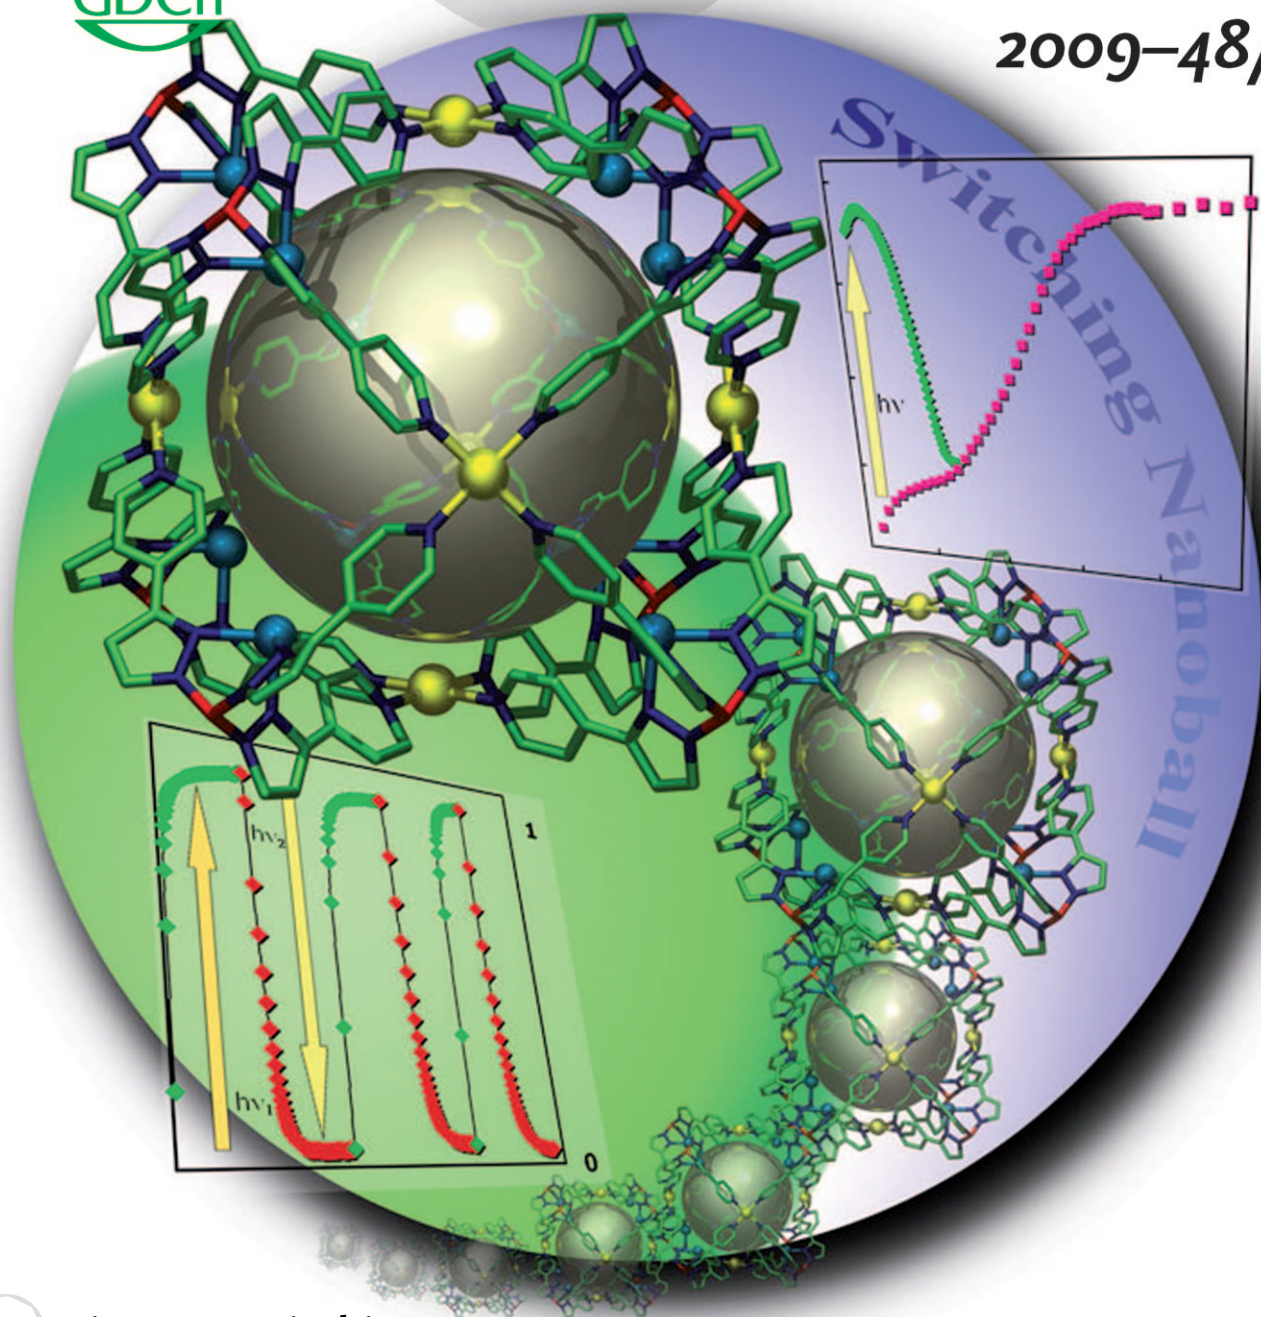

Angewandte Chemie

International Edition

GDCh

www.angewandte.org

2009–48/14

Continuous switching ...

... between high-spin and low-spin magnetic states can be accomplished by irradiation with red and green laser light, respectively. In their Communication on page 2549 ff., S. R. Batten and co-workers report a metallo-supramolecule that undergoes spin crossover (SCO) switching induced by temperature change or light irradiation. The SCO behavior is also dependent on the presence and nature of intercalated solvent molecules within the porous crystal structure.

 WILEY-VCH

Inside Cover

Martin B. Duriska, Suzanne M. Neville, Boujemaa Moubaraki, John D. Cashion, Gregory J. Halder, Karena W. Chapman, Chérif Balde, Jean-François Létard, Keith S. Murray, Cameron J. Kepert, and Stuart R. Batten*

Continuous switching between high-spin and low-spin magnetic states can be accomplished by irradiation with red and green laser light, respectively. In their Communication on page 2549 ff., S. R. Batten and co-workers report a metallo-supramolecule that undergoes spin crossover (SCO) switching induced by temperature change or light irradiation. The SCO behavior is also dependent on the presence and nature of intercalated solvent molecules within the porous crystal structure.

