

A Journal of the Gesellschaft Deutscher Chemiker

Angewandte Chemie

50
YEARS

International Edition

www.angewandte.org

2011–50/16

Magnetically responsive ...

... photonic nanochains composed of superparamagnetic Fe_3O_4 particles fixed within a silica shell are the smallest diffracting units that can operate in the visible spectrum. As Y. Yin et al. describe in their Communication on page 3747 ff., the synthesis involves magnetically forming chains of particles during silica coating and then wrapping them with additional silica to give mechanically robust and optically active rods.

 WILEY-VCH

Back Cover

Yongxing Hu, Le He, and Yadong Yin*

Magnetically responsive photonic nanochains composed of superparamagnetic Fe_3O_4 particles fixed within a silica shell are the smallest diffracting units that can operate in the visible spectrum. As Y. Yin et al. describe in their Communication on page 3747 ff., the synthesis involves magnetically forming chains of particles during silica coating and then wrapping them with additional silica to give mechanically robust and optically active rods.

