

A Journal of the Gesellschaft Deutscher Chemiker

Angewandte Chemie

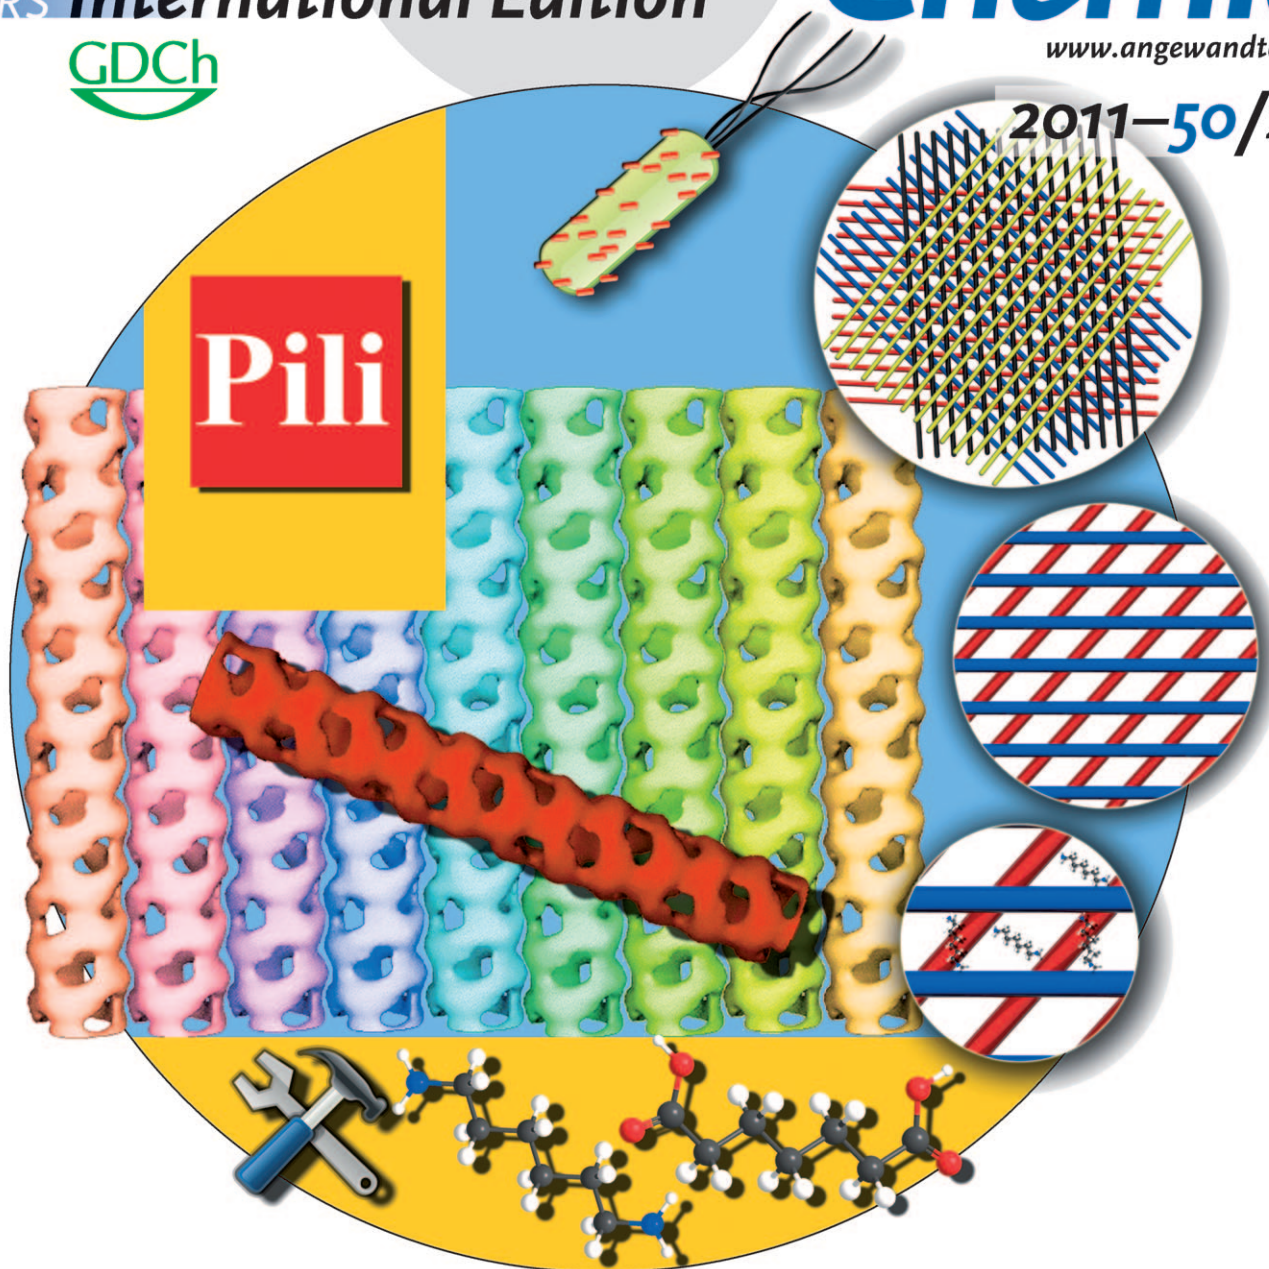

50
YEARS

International Edition

GDCh

www.angewandte.org

2011–50/28

Pili are rodlike nanoparticles ...

... protruding from bacterial cell surfaces. Once detached, they can form ordered assemblies, including 1D bundles, 2D double-layer lattices, and 3D multilayer lattices, with the help of inducer molecules. As described by C. Mao and co-workers in their Communication on page 6264 ff., the assemblies can be used as biotemplates to induce the formation and organization of other materials.

 WILEY-VCH

Inside Cover

Binrui Cao, Hong Xu, and Chuanbin Mao*

Pili are rodlike nanoparticles protruding from bacterial cell surfaces. Once detached, they can form ordered assemblies, including 1D bundles, 2D double-layer lattices, and 3D multilayer lattices, with the help of inducer molecules. As described by C. Mao and co-workers in their Communication on page 6264 ff., the assemblies can be used as biotemplates to induce the formation and organization of other materials.

