

The Eighth International Conference on Antiviral Research
23 - 28 April 1995
Sweeny Convention Center
Sante Fe, New Mexico, USA

The Eighth International Conference on Antiviral Research will be held at the Sweeny Convention Center in Santa Fe, New Mexico, USA. The Sweeny Convention Center, near Santa Fe's famous Plaza, is within easy walking distance of many fine hotels which have rooms reserved especially for this conference.

Santa Fe - known as the "the City Different" - is located in the foothills of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains of northern New Mexico. It is a fascinating city with historical, cultural, and scenic beauty. Santa Fe, as a world class destination, received the International Reader's Choice Award from Conde Nast Traveler magazine.

The architectural heritage of Santa Fe stems from the Spanish inheritance of adobe construction from the Moors, Anglo incorporation of eastern building styles and materials, and Native American influences. Downtown offers historical points such as the Miraculous Winding Staircase at the Loretto Chapel and San Miguel Mission, the oldest church in the United States. Santa Fe is within easy driving distance of a number of Native American Pueblos which allow tourists to experience life in the oldest villages in America.

The sun shines an average of 300 days a year providing a dry, mild climate. Outdoor recreation opportunities include swimming, tennis, and golf as well as skiing, hiking, horseback riding, camping, and fishing in nearby mountains that provide breathtaking vistas.

Santa Fe boasts a number of world-class restaurants, uncounted shopping opportunities, and distinctive art galleries and museums. Santa Fe offers recreation, shopping, history, art, cultural diversity, and entertainment in one of the most beautiful settings in America. Santa Fe's unique style and character have charmed visitors from all over the world.