

Editorial

A change in the composition of the Editorial Board of Biophysical Chemistry has taken place. After having served on the Board for many years, Professor Fumio Oosawa has decided to step down. Before joining the Editorial Board, he had already been a member of the Advisory Board of Biophysical Chemistry since its launch. In both capacities he has been extremely effective in attracting good papers and keeping up or even increasing the already high standards of this journal.

The other Editors and the Publishers wish to express their great appreciation and to give sincere thanks for his efforts on behalf of Biophysical Chemistry over the years.

I am glad to be able to announce that, as per the 1st of April, Professor Hiroshi Maeda (Kyushu University, Fukuoka, Japan) has joined the Editorial Board of Biophysical Chemistry and which has brought the number of editors up to eight again. As already announced previously we have been fortunate in that Dr Anthony Watts (University of Oxford, UK) also agreed to become a member of the Editorial Board from the beginning of this year.

I am convinced that in its new configuration the Editorial Board of Biophysical Chemistry will be successful in realizing the goals of this journal.
