The highest rated game show in syndication expands to a strip next season. Offering bigger-than-ever rewards as a nightly fixture in stations' access schedules.

Now playing on a once or twice-a-week basis in 117 markets, Goodson-Todman's "Family Feud" ranks Number One among all game shows in:

Rating!	Men!
Households!	18-49 Men!
Women!	Teens!
18-49 Women!	Children!

Seldom has a show demonstrated such strength among all key demographic groups.

That's why the 5 NBC Owned stations made an unprecedented move. In scheduling Goodson-Todman's "Family Feud" for Fall, they become the first o&o group ever to strip in access time.

Now, stations everywhere are responding to news of this new strip with unprecedented demand.

Did you ever have a better reason to pick up the telephone?

The Week in Brief

TOP OF THE WEEK

PRIME TIME, PRIME PRICES □ The three commercial TV networks will spend about $39.3 million for a single week of prime-time programming next spring. Here's a rundown of the programs, producers and costs. PAGE 31.

NEWS IN THE NEWS □ CBS-TV's premier newsmen wants to continue without facing the daily deadline grind of the Evening News. That restirs the rumor pot about Rather, Mudd and bidding from other networks. Meanwhile, another question mark: Will 11:30 news become a network-affiliate battleground? PAGE 32.

GROUNDING □ Despite the threat of a Carter veto, the Senate overwhelmingly votes restrictions on the FTC, including a stop to the children's advertising proceeding. PAGE 35.

HOPE ON EQUAL TIME □ Substantial support is voiced for a bill that would exempt presidential and vice presidential candidates from Section 315 requirements for paid time. PAGE 37.

SPECIAL REPORT

NATPE IN SAN FRANCISCO □ More than 3,700 are heading there for the TV conference that begins later this week. The over-all theme will be "Programming in the 80's," but many workshops and meetings will also be devoted to issues that have already confronted broadcasters and programmers. PAGE 39. A list of the companies that will exhibit, what they offer and who will represent them. PAGE 46. The complete agenda for those eight days in San Francisco. PAGE 70.

JOURNALISM

MAKING '60 MINUTES' TICK □ Don Hewitt, the CBS behind-the-scenes executive producer, discusses the newsmagazine that is on top of TV's prime-time ratings. PAGE 76.

COVERING THE STING □ For weeks, NBC's investigative team had been on the story of the FBI operation that involved congressmen and "bribe offers." But it was hard-pressed to beat the competition when the story broke Feb. 2. PAGE 88.

PROGRAMMING

DEADLOCKED □ ABC-TV captures prime-time ratings honors for the week ended Feb. 3. That puts it in a tie with CBS-TV for the season-to-date. PAGE 92.

LAW & REGULATION

DOOR CLOSED □ The FCC's refusal to reconsider its basic spectrum allocations and policies inhibits the growth of more TV networks. That's the conclusion of a consultant on the commission's network inquiry special staff. PAGE 100.

HANDS OFF □ Metromedia asks the FCC to exempt from common-carrier status those companies that offer superstation programming. It also points out such programs would be subject to copyright payment. PAGE 106.

BACK TO FCC □ An appeals court rejects a request of Hollywood producers, actors and writers who opposed the remand of the family-viewing case to the commission. PAGE 108.

TECHNOLOGY

TORONTO REPORT □ The SMPTE sets up a working group to speed up development of standards for digital television. PAGE 108. And one of its applications, teletext, was a hot topic during the two-day meeting. PAGE 110.

PROFILE

RAMROD FOR RKO □ Launched just last fall, the adult-oriented RKO Radio Network already has 85 affiliates and intends to have 250 by the end of next year. Credit for much of that fast start goes to Tom Burchill, its vice president and general manager, who vows that his future performance will match his past success. PAGE 153.

Latin candidates

Hispanic Americans evidently are concerned about reports that some of their number are supporting FCC Commissioner James H. Quello for reappointment when his term expires on June 30 (BROADCASTING, Jan. 28). White House has received number of letters from Hispanic Americans saying their community is still determined to secure appointment for one of its own.

Letters have come from individuals recommending themselves, as well as from citizen groups with additional recommendations. White House is said to be planning in next month to interview three of those recommended. Two are Hispanic Americans, one is presumed to be Anglo male. All are attorneys, though only one has background in communications; he is said to be attorney for broadcasting company.

Give and take

Headway is being made in Communications Subcommittee of Senate on compromise bill updating common carrier provisions of 1934 Communications Act, but broadcasting amendments are still on back burner. Majority and minority staff members are trying to reconcile differences in bills introduced by subcommittee chairman, Ernest F. (Fritz) Hollings (D-S.C.), and by Senators Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) and Harrison Schmitt (R-N.M.).

Some think it will be easier to reach accord on common carrier matters than on broadcasting. In latter, one point of difference that may be difficult to bridge is fees to be charged for broadcast use of spectrum. Hollings would bill broadcasters somewhere around $60 million a year, Goldwater-Schmitt, about $7 million. So far no sign of retreat on that by either side.

Try, try again

Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corp., Mobil Corp.'s most vocal ally in campaign to place issue advertising on TV networks (BROADCASTING, May 21, 1979, et seq.), is charging ramparts again. It has submitted four new commercials to all three networks, says it's awaiting word from their standards and practices departments. One deals with problems of productivity, one with need for conservation program, one for hiring disadvantaged youth, one to get out vote next November.

In speech last December, C.C. Maier, Kaiser chairman and president, said ABC had indicated willingness to review its position on issue advertising but that CBS and NBC were holding firm. ABC officials say their willingness was to review any commercials Kaiser wanted to submit, and that their policy—against commercials that discuss controversial issues of public importance—remains unchanged. In fact, they say, three of present batch of Kaiser submissions do not conflict with that policy but that they're telling Kaiser there are some problems with one that deals with productivity. Kaiser will get chance to revise it.

Half a loaf

Public broadcasting officials were all smiles last week as elusive milestone—cumulative audience of 50% of U.S. television homes—may finally have been reached. National Nielsen for last week won't be available to noncommercial TV until mid-March, but overnights and conversations with stations lead Public Broadcasting Service officials to believe that magic number has been reached. Contributing to jump in numbers, officials believe, is common-carriage scheduling, along with stepped-up promotion campaign and, perhaps most important, better programing.

Regularly scheduled shows turned in good numbers, but biggest winner seems to be National Geographic special on human brain, with 5.5 rating and 7.5 share in New York, 4.5/6.6 in Los Angeles, 10/13.5 in Chicago, and 10.1/15 in San Francisco.

Up-to-date PR

Federal Trade Commission wants to spread its word—especially among radio broadcasters. Its press office is awaiting equipment that will enable it to produce actuality tapes—audio feeds on commission proceedings and decisions that will serve broadcasters in much same way press releases serve print media. Program is like one currently being operated at White House (BROADCASTING, Dec. 11, 1978).

Air or ground?

National Association of Broadcasters is expected to release major study of over-air subscription television in early April. It is being prepared by two professors at University of Tennessee.

One area of study is likely to be examination of competitive relationship between STV and pay cable. Evidence from New York metropolitan area and northern New Jersey suggests that number of STV subscriptions declines as pay cable penetration increases. With one coded channel offered at virtually same price as total cable service, viewers appear to lean toward pay cable. STV's advantage comes into play with reduced hardware costs, which will allow operators to lower monthly fees charged viewers.

Zenith's choice

Video watchers are focusing on Zenith, long among leaders in television set manufacturing, to see which way it jumps in videodisk field. If it goes to RCA's SelectaVision, as CBS did in taking out RCA license to manufacture disks (BROADCASTING, Jan. 14), that would put frosting on RCA system. On other hand, selection of MCA-Philips-Magnavox optical system would give boost to RCA's main competitor. (Matsushita has announced third system [BROADCASTING, Feb. 4].)

Stakes may be huge. RCA officials see videodisk market becoming second in volume only to that of color TV's heyday.

Mann's act?

Puzzling several FCC members following 4-3 decision that imperils RKO General's $400-million-plus station group was prompt and favorable editorial treatment of unprecedented action in such publications as Washington Post and its co-owned Newsweek and New York Times. Answer, it's said, was preconditioning by Robert Mann, chief of FCC public affairs office, hand picked by Chairman Charles Ferris (BROADCASTING, Jan. 29, 1979). Mann, who once headed journalism department of Southern Methodist University and was city editor of Dallas Times-Herald, earned political spurs as press secretary to Representative Robert C. Krueger (D-Tex.).

Other members of FCC may raise question of Mann acting as press agent for chairman, to whom he reports, as do other Ferris-selected department heads. All seven commissioners are named by President and confirmed by Senate, with equal vote and authority over staff, except for housekeeping and presiding functions assigned to chairman.

Hooks's horizons

Rev. Ben L. Hooks, who terminated five-year tenure on FCC in 1977 to become executive director of National Association for Advancement of Colored People, may seek new challenges when his three-year contract expires next August. He has confided that, with NAACP prestige and clout restored, he may opt to return to law practice, or to Baptist pulpits in Memphis and Detroit (where he's now emeritus) or possibly to public life (he was judge in Kentucky in 1966-68 before FCC tenure).

A broadcast advertising commentary from Durelle Durham, president, Durham Associates, Memphis

Thirty minutes of sell that was so soft it passed muster at NAB

If I were to choose the single most important element in successful marketing, I would say it would be information. I am a great believer in education in advertising, particularly with do-it-yourself products.

Without question, education was the secret of what has come to be known as the Formby phenomenon. Curiously, part of our secret at Durham & Associates consisted of advising the client to dispense with TV commercials—but not with television.

Formby, a quality line of furniture refinishing products, was virtually unknown when Durham took over the account several years ago. At the time, Formby had a meager total of 87 dealers in department and hardware stores and home centers scattered mainly throughout the Southeastern section of the nation. The products sold well wherever they were offered in conjunction with actual demonstrations, but with only 87 dealers, total sales were predictably small.

Durham's use of television revolutionized the company's sales pattern. The emphasis, as I have said, was on education. It's the secret of selling, especially with do-it-yourself products. We knew that people were buying Formby products after they saw them used in demonstrations—but you can reach just so many customers in department stores and home centers. Television enabled us to multiply that effect of selling by demonstration many times over.

And multiply it did. After six years of Durham's educational marketing techniques, Formby had 36,000 dealers on its roster. The Formby products had nationwide distribution, recognition and, most significant, sales increases.

How did Formby do it? Without television, the extraordinary achievement wouldn't have been possible.

Prior to coming to Durham, Formby had enjoyed some small success with a 30-minute television show that demonstrated many of the easy ways to restore antiques and abused furniture to original beauty with Formby products. The commercials told viewers exactly where they could purchase the products.

The problem was that although the show was highly educational, it was almost impossible to convince television stations to air the series. Wary of any threat to their licenses, the managements of the stations said that they considered the shows to be 30-minute commercials. That, as everyone knows, is strictly against government guidelines.

Durelle Durham, president of Durham & Associates, Memphis, formed his agency in 1968. Before that Durham worked extensively in broadcasting for more than 15 years, most recently as director of creative services for WWSB-TV Memphis.

When Durham & Associates took on the account, the agency recommendations were simple. Do more shows, remove all product commercials and simply offer a free Formby Tip Booklet in the commercial breaks.

Durham launched the campaign with a series of 30-minute shows which included easy-to-follow demonstrations of refinishing furniture plus helpful hints and information on household cleaning and maintenance and crafts. There were no commercials. The sell was so soft, in fact, that even the brand names were intentionally blocked out. The purpose clearly was purely educational.

Despite Durham's caution, television stations continued to be reluctant to air the shows. They still saw it as a 30-minute commercial. We solved that problem by taking the show to the National Association of Broadcasters. After we got unqualified NAB approval, the stations were happy to let us buy the time.

Under Durham's direction, the series was designed to have a push-pull effect. Although there were no commercials, participating dealers were mentioned on the air and viewers were invited to stop in to pick up a tip booklet. Dealers liked the idea of free mentions on television so they were happy to cooperate by having Formby products plus supportive point-of-sale materials in their stores.

Initially the series was started in a small market. The results were so spectacular, the next step was to enlarge the exposure to seven cities. From there it went to 21 cities and eventually nationwide.

Film demonstrations figured prominently in the next major project for Formby. After a couple of years in television Durham enlarged the program to include use of on-the-spot, in-store demonstrations with Formby films. A Fairchild film cassette unit was built into a display of Formby products.

Again, the sell was soft and low-key, with demonstrations of the hows and the whys of do-it-yourself techniques. There was, however, a clear commercial message.

Because these demonstrations were in-store rather than on television, the Formby products were used on camera with great effect. The units, called the Formby Furniture Care Centers, did more wonders for sales. In combination with the television series, they helped give Formby products an 82% share of the entire refinishing products market—four times as much as all competitors combined.

Still another form of public service reinforced the now flourishing company's spectacular growth. In addition to showing television audiences "how-to" techniques, viewers were invited to write in to their stations if they had problems which were not covered in the show. They then received solutions to their specific questions. During one year, more than half a million pieces of mail containing problem queries were answered.

Many of the questions followed a similar pattern and could thus be answered by programed typewriters. Others, however, required individualized responses.

The Formby phenomenon may have surprised some but not our agency. It's just one example of what television can do with do-it-yourself advertising.

During the years that the Formby series was aired, it never achieved high ratings or anything but a very narrow section of the viewing audience. While such a showing might be negative for some products, in this case the figures were more than offset by the growth in sales.

Educating consumers about a product is essential and television is a great way to do it. If you have two similar products side by side on the shelf in the store, consumers will buy the brand that they have seen promoted through proper education. We show the process of how a product is used and the results you can get with that product.

We do it with before-and-after pictures, point-of-purchase materials, demonstrations, film cassettes and, of course, with television.

THE MORE KIDS IN RICHMOND GOT INVOLVED WITH TELEVISION THE SMARTER THEY GOT.

Kids aren't just involved with WWBT's show "Jack and the Juke Box," they are the show.

Children interested in music receive instruction, conceive program material to demonstrate their new-found skills, and then perform on camera.

By allowing kids to learn by doing, the show provides a stimulating educational experience.

The Richmond city schools were so impressed with "Jack and the Juke Box" they made it an extension of their system.

The NATPE was so impressed with "Jack and the Juke Box," they voted it their Iris Award as the best locally produced children's show in the country's under top 25 markets.

We're honored. But even more rewarding is the satisfaction gained from putting television to a constructive new use.

Television has tremendous potential, not the least of which is helping our children realize their potential.

AP TV WIRE IT'S A LOT MORE THAN JUST A NEWS WIRE.

The AP TV Wire is the first newswire designed especially to meet the unique needs of television. It's a high-speed (1200 wpm) source wire which provides all the world's news accurately, objectively, and fast. But, the AP TV Wire is a lot more than that.

The Programming Plus

Fully one-third of all material on the AP TV Wire is designed for story and feature programming. Consumer tips, health and fitness, human interest, movie reviews, "magazine" style stories, plus lots more to be stripped into your noon shows, AM shows, or other non-news programming.

Additionally, there are backgrounders for public affairs programming, research data for editorials, and a wealth of source material on a wide range of subjects.

Supplemental Services

The AP TV Wire can be made even more effective by adding two photo services — AP PhotoColor and AP LaserPhoto.

The AP TV Wire works for your station 24 hours every day, providing the type of material that can strengthen your overall product and help you build ratings.

AP TV Wire: It's a lot more than just a news wire!

The Professional

He Works For You: Jerry Cipriano

Let's face it. The people who write your AP Broadcast Wire are a pretty faceless group. You don't think of them very often.

With people like Jerry Cipriano on the job, you don't have to.

He's not just another pretty face. He won our top radio writing award last year, and if we're not careful he'll do it again this year.

We like that. We're like Jerry Cipriano.

Professional.

You've heard the stories.

The horrifying reports of parents who brutalize their kids. And it scares you. It nauseates you.

Then there's Denise.

A woman who turned the tables on 24 years of the worst kind of pain life can dish out.

A woman who abused her son. And watched as her husband brutally killed their 2-year-old daughter.

Sickening beyond belief.

Denise wasn't a pretty story to tell. Things like this never are. But if we're to put even a dent in the child abuse problem, we simply have no other choice.

Almost 1 million viewers saw Denise resulting in the highest rating* and share for a public affairs program in our history.

Quite frankly, no other program in its prime-time slot, network or local, even came close.

But as good as the numbers are, they're not nearly good enough. Because when just one person misses a program like this, it's one too many.

Denise. It made a lot of people sad. It made a lot of people furious. But above all, it made a lot of people think.

WCVB-TV, through BBI Communications, will soon be offering Denise to other stations as a public service.

Disturbed about the DSA

EDITOR: Your report in the Jan. 28 "Closed Circuit" regarding the National Association of Broadcasters' Distinguished Service Award has prompted me to express my thoughts on the subject.

Don Thurston, the recently nominated Distinguished Service Award recipient, is a man of impeccable character, a fine broadcaster and has been an outstanding chairman of the NAB joint board. Despite these impressive credentials, he should not receive this award at this time, nor should any recently retired NAB joint board chairman. The reasons are obvious, but have apparently been overlooked:

- Insufficient perspective to appraise the value of the individual's total service to broadcasting.

- Potential (real or imagined) for political manipulations of the selection process by a recently retired chairman.

- Creation of a double bind precedent that taints chairmen who are selected and denigrates those who are not.

TOP OF THE WEEK

$40 million each week for prime time

That's how much the networks will be spending for their first-run episodes; their total bill for the season is more than $1 billion, up 40% from 1978

The three commercial networks will spend approximately $39,327,000 for one week of prime-time programming this spring, according to a survey by BROADCASTING. They are expected to spend a total of $26,345,000 each week for regularly scheduled series and approximately $12,982,000 for theatrical films, made-for-TV movies and various special programs. Over a 26-week season, a rough three-network programming cost total comes to more than $1 billion. That's a 40% increase over the $730 million spent by the networks for the 1978-79 season (BROADCASTING, Sept. 4, 1978).

And, according to the networks' March schedules announced as of last Tuesday (Feb. 5), independent producer Aaron Spelling, through his own Aaron Spelling Productions and Spelling/Goldberg Productions, will have a total of seven hours of network series each week—beating out the long-time prime-time leader, Universal Television, by a half hour.

ABC-TV, with a total of 36 half hours of regularly scheduled programs in its spring schedule, will be spending approximately $9,915,000 in license fees each week, or $275,000 for every 30 minutes of series programming. CBS-TV, also with 36 half hours, will spend approximately $9,340,000, or $259,000 every half hour. NBC has 28 half hours of series programming at an approximate cost of $256,000 each for a total of $7,090,000.

ABC-TV will also spend approximately $4,015,000 to fill its two two-hour movie blocks each week. Also with two two-hour movie blocks, CBS will spend an additional $3,774,000 each week. And NBC, with eight hours of special programming each week, will be spending another $5,193,000.

The figures for each of the network's weekly programming expenditures have been derived from estimates offered by producers, program syndicators, packagers and network executives.

The most expensive half-hour program on network television is believed to be Paramount Television's Happy Days, for which ABC is said to be paying $475,000 per episode. CBS's most expensive half hour is believed to be *M*A*S*H* from 20th Century-Fox at approximately $400,000 per episode. And NBC is reported to be paying producer Larry Gelbart's OTP Productions approximately $400,000 for each 30-minute episode of his new United States, which is not scheduled to debut until March 4.

Among the hour programs, NBC is thought to have the most expensive in Universal's Buck Rogers in the 25th Century—$800,000 per episode. ABC runs second, paying Spelling/Goldberg approximately $750,000 for each hour of Charlie's Angels. The most expensive hour on the CBS line-up is thought to be Lorimar Productions' lavishly made Dallas at about $660,000.

According to producers, networks are paying $1.2 million-$1.5 million for made-for-TV movies, which generally run two hours. (But some reports hold that made-for-TV movies cost in the neighborhood of $2 million.) The costs for specials and theatrical films vary greatly.

Furthermore, license fees—for series as well as specials and films—are generally computed on multiple-run bases. Thus, for example, ABC may pay $475,000 for one episode of Happy Days, but the network is likely to air that episode two or even three times over the course of a broadcast year. Film deals, especially for blockbusters that can command millions of dollars from the networks, generally allow for three or more airings—bringing the approximately $3-million cost for the average film down to about $1 million per airing.

With seven one-hour programs on ABC, Aaron Spelling is the reigning king of prime-time production. His programs include: The Love Boat, Vega$ and The B.A.D. Cats (all ASP); Charlie's Angels, Family and Hart to Hart (all S/GP) and Fantasy Island (S/GP, in association with Columbia Pictures Television). Spelling's programs are generally believed to be among Hollywood's most expensively produced and often feature well-known stars and location shots. Too, the programs are long-running network hits. The programs are, as a result, believed to be among the most expensive to the network. It is estimated that Spelling's empire receives approximately $4,525,000 from ABC each week.

Universal Television, with six-and-a-half hours on all three networks, has traditionally been able to produce series programming at costs below most other production firms. This has been largely a result of the studio's practice of maintaining contract talent (producers, writers, directors and stars). It is believed that Universal is receiving approximately $3,665,000 in series license fees each week.

Ranked number three among Hollywood production houses this spring is Lorimar with five one-hour programs on all three networks: Eight is Enough (ABC); Skag (NBC), and on CBS Dallas, The Waltons and Knots Landing.

Paramount and MTM Enterprises have three hours each. Tandem Productions/TAT Communications and 20th Century-Fox have two-and-a-half hours. Next in line, with two hours, are Alan Landsburg Productions and MGM Television. Producer Nick Vanoff has one 90-minute show, and Warner Bros. Television also has an hour and a half. Production firms with one hour of network time are: Ed Friendly Productions, QM Productions, Nicholl/Ross/West, Witt-Thomas-Harris, George Schlatter and Stephen J. Cannell. Firms with 30 minutes of prime-time are: Toy Productions, OTP and Four D Productions. The network news divisions each produce one hour of prime-time programming weekly. CBS produces the hour-long Hawaii Five-O series, and NBC produces the one-hour Best of Saturday Night Live.

Cronkite to step down but not out; late news coming?

Anchorman probably will quit daily duties after elections; Mudd and Rather are principal heirs apparent; CBS and ABC successes with late-night shows lead to speculation that they, at least, may make them permanent Network TV news, early and late, was in the news last week.

The early-evening news got there when Walter Cronkite, making long-time speculation official, said he had told CBS that he wants to leave the CBS Evening News—but not CBS News—when his contract expires in November 1981, and preferably before then.

That was a matter of concern to CBS officials, not only because it means their ultimate loss of television's pre-eminent anchorman, but also because they must now face up to a decision on his successor. It was also of eager interest to ABC News and NBC News, where it was surmised that when Cronkite's successor is named, one and conceivably two CBS News stars will make themselves available to work at other networks.

Bill Leonard, CBS News president, said he expected a decision on the successor to be made relatively soon—"sooner rather than later"—but wouldn't define soon in terms of days, weeks or months. CBS News correspondents Dan Rather and Roger Mudd were widely regarded as front-runners, and it was also widely assumed that if one was named, the other would leave—and that both might leave if someone else gets the plum. Leonard, without confirming any names, said in answer to a question that having co-anchors "is possible, but I think improbable."

Speculation about a Cronkite successor shared time with speculation about the introduction of regular 11:30 p.m. NYT network newscasts. Since mid-November, ABC has been carrying news specials on the Iran crisis at 11:30, mostly quarter-hours but some longer, and has been pleased with the ratings, which have averaged 9.8 with a 30 share of audience.

ABC accordingly is considering—and so is CBS News and, apparently to a lesser extent, NBC News—the introduction of network nightly news at 11:30 p.m. If that happens, it's almost certain to stir up the affiliates, conceivably to the levels of revolt that turned back efforts to expand network early-evening news a few years ago. A prominent CBS affiliate said last week: "It think there'd be all kinds of hell to pay."

ABC News authorities say they have made no decision on a regular 11:30 news cast or, if it introduces one, what format it would use or whether it would be 15 minutes or 30—or, as one source suggested, perhaps longer than 15 but not necessarily 30.

ABC officials also note they would have some scheduling problems, since they are committed to introduce Fridays on Friday nights at 11:30-12:30, beginning in April, and, in the fall, are subject to runovers of Monday night pro football games. Some sources speculated that an 11:30 newscast could start, at least until football season, on a Monday-through-Thursday basis.

Leonard said CBS News is seriously considering an 11:30 newscast that might be "either 15 minutes or an expandable 15 minutes." He said a decision should be reached within months.

Bill Small, president of NBC News, said his organization is "looking at" the possibility of an 11:30 newscast, "among other things." Though no decision has been reached, he said, "at the moment the answer is probably no." "Other things" being considered, he said, include "generally, where to put [news] specials."

It was not clear how much affiliate opposition would be aroused by a regular 11:30 network newscast, but a sampling among affiliates of all three networks left little doubt there would be some—some of it vociferous. The sampling also found some affiliate support.

Bob Fountain, head of affiliate relations at ABC-TV, said he had sounded out affiliates informally. "I think a majority feel it's a major opportunity for all of us." But, he added, "there's a very vocal small number who are not encouraging us to go ahead." In the same vein, Jeff Davidson of WXIA-TV Atlanta, chairman of the ABC-TV affiliates, said that "some of the affiliates are in favor of it and some are not." Neither he nor Fountain indicated how strong the opposition might be.

One ABC affiliate in favor is Eugene Bohi of WGHP-TV High Point, N.C., a former member of the ABC-TV affiliates board and now chairman of the affiliates' government relations committee. "There's a lot that goes on between 6:30 and 11:30," he said. "A large part of the affiliate body clears ABC's late-night programming. All this would do is extend late-night by 15 minutes."

Bohi felt, however, that a 15-minute network newscast at 11:30 would be enough: "To extend past 11:45 would be difficult."

Another ABC-TV affiliate, who asked not to be identified, disagreed. "After the initial exposure," he said, "news tends to get repetitive. When you've said it on the early-evening newscast, then repeated it on updates, chewing it again at 11:30 would be a little much."

This affiliate said his station has been carrying ABC's Iran wrapups, then a movie—the station is in the central time zone—and then, on a delayed basis, ABC's late-night programming. But in the feeling that the Iran specials themselves are becoming "repetitive," he said, the station plans to drop them after the Olympics.

Some affiliates suggested that primary opposition among affiliates will come from those not now carrying network late-night programming, or delaying it for the presentation of local syndicated shows or theatrical features. A network newscast would break the flow from local news to local programming—a break that many stations feel would be more disruptive with a regular newscast than with the specials on the Iran situation, which is seen as having unusual pulling power among television viewers.

Even among ABC affiliates favoring 11:30 network news, some had reservations or conditions. In addition to feeling that it should not exceed 15 minutes, a number felt that it would have to be a strip to succeed and that running only three or four nights a week would imperil it.

Cronkite

Mudd

While the future of 11:30 network news was uncertain, Cronkite appeared firm in what he wanted his to be—continuing to work at CBS News but not under the pressures of daily deadlines. The new CBS News science series, Universe, was said to have a special appeal for him.

He and CBS News officials said it had been agreed he should not step down until after the elections. "We're talking a year down the line at the very earliest," President Leonard said.

Roger Mudd was long regarded as Cronkite's heir apparent, but in recent months Dan Rather has risen in speculation.

There were reports that ABC offered Rather as much as $8 million over five years, though other accounts say the figure is well below that. NBC also reportedly has made overtures, and CBS itself is negotiating with him. Leonard said last week that "if you pinned me to the floor, I couldn't tell you what he's going to do." Rather's CBS contract runs to mid-1981, according to CBS sources.

Longtime acquaintances of Cronkite's did not entirely write off the prospect that he might stay in—or be brought back to—the anchor post after his current contract expires (and he reaches age 65) in November 1981. "He's such a warhorse and he loves it so," one said last week, "that I honestly believe they could persuade him."

Senate puts the kibosh on FTC children's ad proceeding

Commission authorization voted out without one-house veto provision, but one amendment would end investigation into commercials aimed at kids; House measure, however, differs in both respects

The Senate, in a series of moves last week that clipped the wings of the Federal Trade Commission without totally grounding it, voted to kill the FTC's children's advertising proceeding.

By a vote of 77 to 13, the Senate approved S. 1991, the FTC's authorizing legislation. But the final vote came after the Senate had rejected a number of amendments—including the controversial one-house veto—that would have all but crippled the agency. One vote that did not go the commission's way, however, involved its children's advertising inquiry. By a 2-1 margin, the Senate voted down an amendment that would have authorized the FTC to proceed with the case.

As approved, the bill mandates that the commission may write rules governing only false or deceptive advertising—not "unfair" advertising, a standard on which the children's inquiry is based. The amendment, offered on the Senate floor by Senators Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.) and Robert Packwood (R-Ore.), would have removed that section from the bill, but it was rejected by a vote of 67 to 30.

One major victory for the commission, however, came when the Senate voted 53 to 45 to reject an amendment by Senator Harrison Schmitt (R-N.M.) that would have saddled the agency with a one-house veto—a provision that would have allowed either house of Congress to override FTC actions. The House approved a similar provision last year, and some were predicting that the Senate would follow suit.

What the Senate approved instead, by a vote of 87 to 10, was a modified legislative veto proposed by Senators Carl Levin (D-Mich.) and David Boren (D-Okla.). Under terms of the amendment, the FTC must send to the Commerce Committees of each house copies of proposed and final rules when published in the Federal Register. No rule could go into effect for 20 days, and during this time the committees could review the rule. If either committee decided to oppose the rule, it would have to vote a joint resolution of disapproval within the 20-day vote period. Once either Commerce Committee so acted, the full Congress then would have 60 days to consider the rule before it went into effect. Both houses and the President would have to approve the joint resolution to prevent the rule from taking effect. Should only one house reject the joint resolution during the 60-day period, the rule could take effect immediately.

This provision is far less stringent than that approved by the House, and consumer groups quickly praised its passage. Congress Watch, the Ralph Nader group, called rejection of the one-house veto a major consumer victory, saying that it proves the measure "is both unworkable and unconstitutional."

Additional commission victories came when the Senate refused to strip the FTC of its power to regulate doctors and other professionals, and when it refused to drastically cut the commission's public participation funding.

The amendment to prohibit the FTC for two years from issuing trade regulation rules involving doctors, dentists, lawyers and other health-related professions was narrowly defeated by a 47-to-45 vote. The second amendment, introduced by Senator Alan Simpson (R-Wyo.), would have limited to $5,000 the amount of compensation payable to a public participant in an FTC rulemaking proceeding. Additionally, it would have required groups to have more than 250 members (but not more than 1,000), dues of at least $10 and no more than $25,000 in revenues. None of the 58 groups that have participated in the FTC program thus far would have qualified under these criteria.

The vote on Simpson's amendment came almost at the same time that President Carter was warning that he would veto any bill that destroyed the FTC's power to protect consumers.

In a speech to the Consumer Federation of America, Carter stood firmly in the Waiting for the verdict. While President Carter was defending the agency, and the Senate was voting on an authorization bill, Federal Trade Commission Chairman Michael Pertschuk was outlining FTC actions before the fourth annual Advertising Law Conference, sponsored by the Federal Bar Association and the American Advertising Federation. This year's conference focused on major regulatory matters, with a particular eye on FTC policy. In addition to Pertschuk, speakers included Senator Bob Packwood (R-Ore.), who expressed some optimism (which later proved unfounded) that his amendment to keep the FTC's children's advertising inquiry alive might find the necessary support; John Rupp, of the Washington law firm Covington & Burling, and Andrew Schwartzman, executive director of the Media Access Project, who took up the subject of the "unfairness doctrine" as a standard for prohibiting truthful commercial speech, and former FCC Chairman Richard Wiley, now with the Washington law firm Kirkland & Ellis, who said that no matter what the FTC's intentions are in the children's advertising proceeding, it ought to re-examine its actions, as the tide of public opinion in the country is running against increased governmental regulation. Pertschuk, who had not made any public comments on the children's inquiry for more than one year, said he knew the issue was an emotional one for the public, "and rightfully so." But the thrust of Pertschuk's remarks centered on other issues, such as comparative advertising and the FTC's role in regulating advertising. "Of course our mission is not only to make sure that the stream of commercial speech flows freely, but to see that it is unpolluted as well," he said. "The latter means we continue to monitor the truth and substantiation of advertising claims, not to inhibit such claims but to ensure that the consuming public can safely rely on advertising, not to chill aggressive competition but to cure chronic cases of old-fashioned deception and misrepresentation."

After more than 10 years of debate, British government has announced plans for now-vacant fourth television channel. Britain currently has one commercial channel, ITV-1, and two noncommercial networks operated by BBC. Government's broadcasting bill, published Feb. 6, states that fourth channel, which will be commercial, should provide programs for minority interests and not merely duplicate mass-appeal programs on ITV-1. Major question—who will actually produce programs—has yet to be determined. Bill does say, however, that large commercial companies that operate ITV-1 and make most of its programs should not have too large role.

Buford Television has made second move into subscription television business with deal to take control of construction permit in Minneapolis. Buford will, upon FCC approval, assume control of 80% of Viking Television, permittee of KTMA-TV (ch. 23) for $475,000 in expenses incurred by Viking in obtaining CP. Viking's owner, Irving O. Beaudoin, will retain 20% interest in CP. If deal goes through, Buford will drop its application for ch. 29 there. Buford put its first subscription television station, WBN(TV) Cincinnati, on air two weeks ago. Programming and marketing of STV is being handled in-house.

commission's corner. "The Federal Trade Commission is one of the greatest weapons the American public has to guarantee truth and integrity and competition in the marketplace," Carter said. "I will not let it be picked to pieces."

He added that "an extraordinary array of special interests" had put FTC efforts "at the top of their hit list."

"Obviously, no agency should be immune from scrutiny, correction or clarification," he said. "But a fine-tuning operation must not be turned into a wrecking crew."

The President called the FTC "one of the oldest and most fundamental safeguards we have for the integrity of the marketplace." He said the agency had been taken for granted, but "we can no longer do that. We have to fight for it. And we will."

FTC Chairman Michael Pertschuk, who defended the children's advertising inquiry on a segment of CBS News's 60 Minutes Feb. 3, and who voiced concern that Congress might derail the proceeding, expressed disappointment after the Senate acted on the Magnuson-Packwood amendment, as well as other provisions that usurp some commission power.

"Of course I'm deeply troubled by those Senate amendments which, as the President said, would 'stop [FTC] activities dead in their tracks,'" Pertschuk said. "On the other hand I'm grateful that the Senate rejected other efforts to strait-jacket the commission's consumer protection and antitrust activities. I'm hopeful that with the President's firm support, the conference will produce a bill that will leave us able to pursue those of our activities essential to preserving a fair and competitive marketplace for the American consumer."

Also disappointed was Peggy Charren, head of Action for Children's Television, which has been the strongest proponent of the children's advertising proceeding.

"It is outrageous that Congress has been so influenced by industry lobbyists that it is ready to sacrifice children's future health and welfare to its perceived short-range political advantage," Charren said. "Along with most of the American public, ACT is convinced that this Senate vote will not impede for long the rights of very young citizens to be protected from commercial abuses."

The death of the children's proceeding, however, is not a foregone conclusion. The House did not have a similar provision in its FTC authorization bill approved last November (BROADCASTING, Dec. 3, 1979), and a House-Senate conference committee will now have to work out a compromise. Whether the House will go along with the move to kill the children's inquiry is uncertain.

In addition to halting the children's advertising inquiry, the Senate bill would affect a wide variety of commission actions. It would, for example, limit the agency's authority to require mandatory warranties in connection with the sale of used cars; it would prohibit the commission from investigating the insurance industry; it would provide for the recovery of attorneys' fees by small businesses in cases in which they prevail against the FTC, and it would cut back on the amount of money available for funding outside groups in rulemaking, although not nearly as drastically as the Simpson amendment would have.

Surprising support for easing of Section 315

Van Deerlin measure gets boost in hearings from his subcommittee, political types and even Dr. Parker

The barrier to legislation that would ease broadcasters' equal-time obligations may not be as impassable as has long been thought. A one-day hearing last week on a bill to exempt appearances of presidential and vice presidential candidates from Section 315's requirements for nonpaid broadcast time not only showed a wide range of support but also provided evidence that congressmen, once wary of easing controls on broadcasters, could be persuaded otherwise.

Under consideration at the hearing before the House Communications Subcommittee was H.R. 6103, introduced by Lionel Van Deerlin (D-Calif.), chairman of the subcommittee (BROADCASTING, Dec. 17, 1979). Among other things, it would permit broadcasters to stage and cover debates involving presidential candidates and feature them in documentaries without incurring equal-time obligations. The intent, Van Deerlin said, "is to free electronic media the same way print media are in political coverage" of presidential and vice presidential contests.

Many of those who testified found fault of one kind or another with the bill. It was not sufficiently specific, some thought. Others pointed out what they regarded as ambiguities. But the climate the testimony created was positive. A panel of broadcast individual broadcasting stations will make up network. Service would be in direct competition with SMARTS should RCA ever get that service off ground. Sperry said Vidsat would use RCA Satcom birds, if transponder time is available.

news executives—Richard Wald, ABC News executive vice president; Bill Monroe, executive producer of NBC's Meet the Press; Edward Fouhy, chief of the CBS News Washington bureau; Fred Young of Hearst Broadcasting, who testified for the Radio-Television News Directors Association, and Barbara Cohen, director of news for National Public Radio—hailed the bill as an important step forward for broadcast journalism. The restrictions under which broadcast journalists operate, Fouhy said, are "frustrating" and "counterproductive."

The subcommittee heard the same message from representatives of the political world. Patrick J. Lucey, deputy campaign manager for Senator Edward M. Kennedy's presidential campaign, said the equal-time law has become "a legal barrier to informing the electorate," broadcasters cite it as a reason for not putting candidates on the air, he said. Dean Burch, the former FCC chairman who was representing the Republican National Committee's legal affairs committee, said broadcasters "have always been stepchildren so far as the First Amendment is concerned" and that the Van Deerlin bill would constitute a step, if only a small one, toward remedying that condition. Ronald Eastman, general counsel of the Democratic National Committee, endorsed the "objectives" of the bill—"we favor the removal of inhibitions that fetter unduly the ability of broadcasters" to inform the public—although he suggested the bill be redrafted to cast its provisions in more specific terms.

Nor was support for the bill limited to major party representatives. Although its defenders say Section 315 assures fair treatment by broadcasters to third-party candidates, Ed Crame, communications director for the Libertarian party's presidential candidate, Ed Clark, said the law has worked to "reduce political debate in general and specifically to inhibit access to the media by the Libertarian party and its candidates." His party, Crane said, "is perfectly willing to compete openly and freely in the marketplace of ideas."

Dr. Everett C. Parker, director of the Office of Communication of the United Church of Christ, did not follow the form some had expected, either. Parker, who is known to broadcasters as one who seems always to be urging the imposition of new regulations on broadcasters, said, "We support H.R. 6103. ['Closed Circuit,' Jan. 14]." Why? The requirements of Section 315, he said, have become an impediment to genuine debate among candidates with widespread support because of the proliferation of "fringe and single-issue candidates for our highest office."

It wasn't all that way. FCC General Counsel Robert Bruce, who said he was speaking for himself because the commission had not yet had an opportunity to consider the bill, said more might be lost than gained by the proposed repeal. For instance, he said without the objective standards of Section 315 to serve as a guide for broadcasters, the commission might intrude further than it does now into stations' operations in resolving disputes between broadcasters and candidates. But more than that, he called the equal-time law "part of the bedrock of public interest responsibility," and said it is "one of the last provisions Congress might want to consider repealing."

But public interest lawyer Heidi Sanchez mounted the only vigorous attack on the bill. Sanchez, a staff attorney at Media Access Project, called the bill "ill-conceived and contrary to the fundamental principles of fair democracy." The bill, she said, would "authorize broadcasters to increase their domination of the minds of the listening and viewing public by discriminating among political opponents."

To Representative Marc L. Marks (R-Pa.), Sanchez, among the last to testify, was "a voice in the wilderness." Throughout the hearing, he had expressed concern about what he regarded as the risk involved in freeing broadcasters from some of the equal-time restrictions. He had cited the commercial networks' failure to carry live the Republican presidential forum in Des Moines last month as an indication the networks are not as concerned as they say they are in informing the public on presidential politics. And, he confessed, "I was taken aback by the fact so many [witnesses] have supported the bill without considering what happens to those who fall by the wayside."

But other subcommittee members during the hearing indicated they were ready to support Van Deerlin in his effort to loosen, to a limited degree, the equal-time bonds. "I'm for increasing discussion, so we should take a look at the restrictive regulations," said Representative Albert Gore (D-Tenn.).

Representative Al Swift (D-Wash.) seemed concerned only that a "safety net," like the fairness doctrine, be available for the protection of candidates who needed it. Representative James T. Broyhill (R-N.C.) agreed with the news executives that coverage of candidates would improve in the absence of Section 315. And Representative Thomas A. Luken (D-Ohio) was also "concerned about safeguards." But, he said, "I may support the bill anyway. I'm not sure we can deal in absolute safeguards."

No-shows depopulated NAB Los Angeles meeting

The National Association of Broadcasters held its fourth and final regional television conference of the year at the Century Plaza hotel in Los Angeles last week before a sparse crowd of about 25. Attendance was only about half of the total pre-registration and well below the approximately 100 people at previous TV conferences in Atlanta, Denver and Houston.

NAB officials—there were seven of them at the meeting—speculated that the low turnout was due to its closeness to this week's National Association of Television Program Executives convention in San Francisco.

Those who were there heard from these people on these subjects:

■ Senator Ernest F. Hollings (D-S.C.), chairman of the Senate Communications Subcommittee, turned his Friday question-and-answer session away from communications issues and made a speech denouncing "the terribly dangerous situation we have let ourselves into" in U.S. dealings with the Soviet Union. He endorsed a military "build-up across the board and accused President Carter of having "no sense of history" in his relations with the Russians. The Senator entertained questions, and the broadcasters followed his lead, directing their inquiries to the current world situation.

■ Also on Friday, NAB Chairman Thomas Bolger, its TV board Chairman, Robert King, and the Television Information Office director, Roy Danish, led a discussion on the industry's public image—which most in the room seemed to feel needs considerable enhancement.

Bolger, offered the idea of a national on-air promotional campaign, featuring a "national spokesperson like a Bob Hope," to tell the industry's story to the "silent majority." There was some support for such a campaign, but it was pointed out that legal obstacles, primarily with the fairness doctrine, could keep such a campaign from being as issue-oriented as the NAB members believed it should be.

■ Paul Bortz, formerly with the National Telecommunications and Information Administration and now a partner in the Denver consulting firm of Browne, Bortz & Coddington, discussed opportunities afforded broadcasters by new video technologies. According to Bortz, local stations—especially independents—must adapt themselves to the changing communications environment.

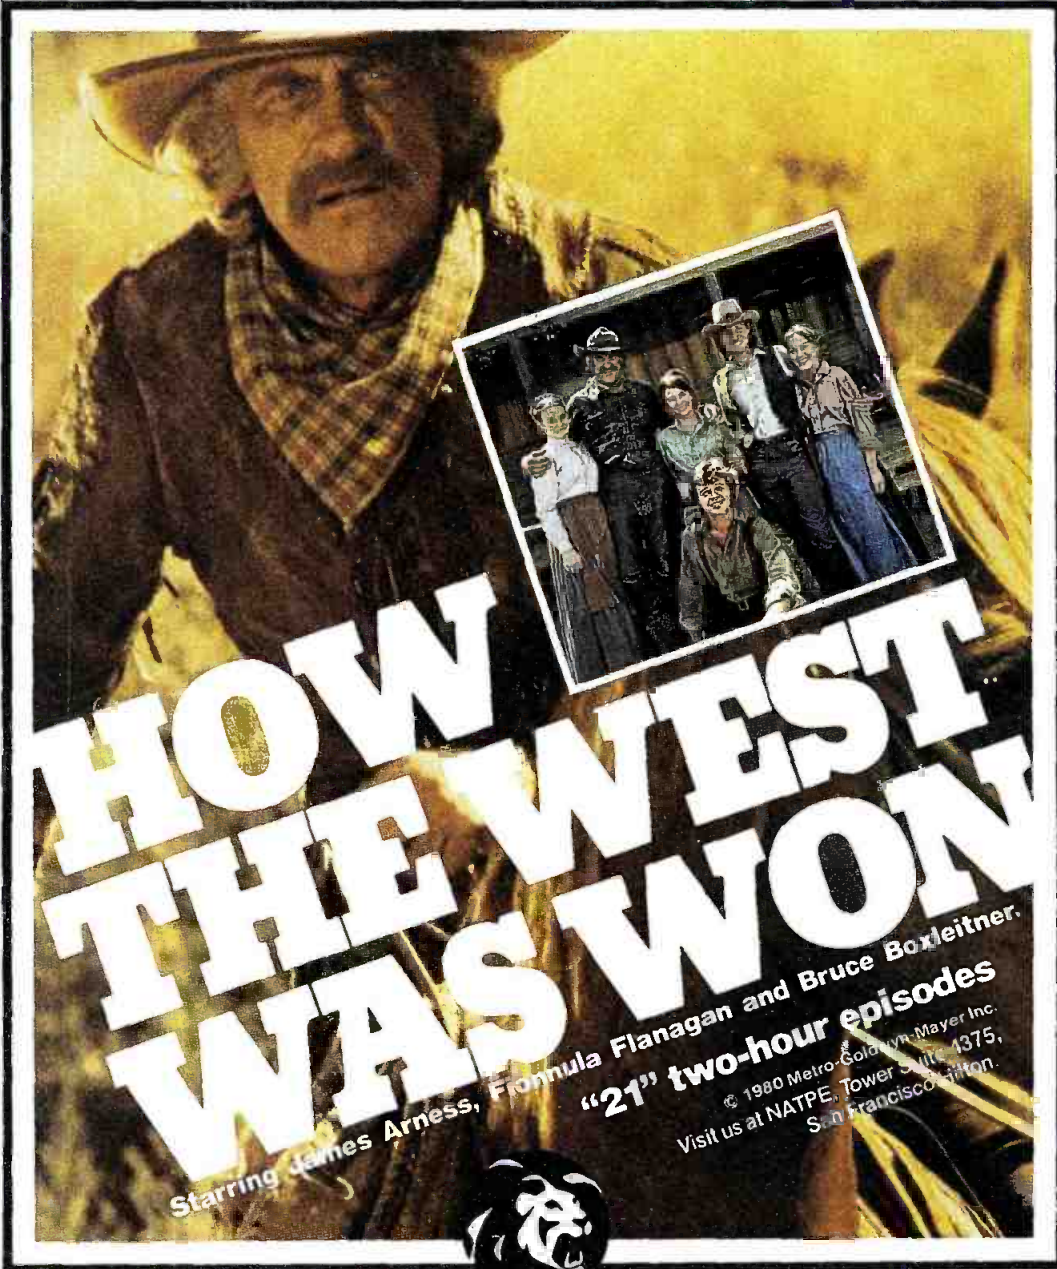

Some of the suggestions he offered included placing a greater emphasis on locally produced news and public affairs programming.

Bortz also suggested a closer look at over-the-air subscription television. Among the opportunities offered by STV, he cited the possibility of local "video clubs" offering coded programming during hours when stations are usually off the air. The late-night STV operation could be sold to viewers as a service for home video recording.

■ If local programming holds the competitive promise of the future, it may cost a lot more than it does today. That was the prognostication of Jay Feldman, news director of KNXT(TV) Los Angeles, a CBS O&O. According to Feldman, news departments are looking to major cost increases across the board—in equipment, investigative reporting, promotion and on- and off-air talent.

For the 3,700 attendees expected at this year's National Association of Television Program Executives conference in San Francisco beginning Saturday (Feb. 16), the over-all theme is "programming in the 80's." There will be plenty of speakers and panelists addressing just that topic. But for a less theoretical glimpse into the not-so-distant future of television, hundreds of videocassette machines will be rolling in the suites of the Hilton hotel.

This year 246 distributors will be setting up shop at NATPE. But with many of the plum station deals cracked in quiet offices prior to NATPE, there's no need to wait and see all the trends.

The NBC owned-and-operated stations demonstrated a couple of them last month when the word broke that they would be stripping Viacom's Family Feud in prime-time access and had picked up MCA TV's Toni Tennille Show as a new late-afternoon talk-variety strip (BROADCASTING, Jan. 28).

Another case in point on stripping are the CBS-owned stations, which only will be checkerboarding at flagship WCBS-TV New York. Elsewhere, WCAU-TV Philadelphia has picked up Viacom's Family Feud and To Tell the Truth strips (for the 7-8 p.m. block, which will run at 7:30 hadn't been determined by last week). KMOX-TV St. Louis now has an extra show on its hands for weekdays and Saturday with five Feuds and an episode each of Victory's Match Game P.M. and ITC Entertainment's The Muppet Show. KNXT(TV) Los Angeles has a local newsmagazine, 2 on The Town, Monday through Friday and WBBM-TV Chicago has news.

While to a lesser extent now, once-or-twice-a-week programming, however, still is needed. The ABC-owned stations are checkerboarding weekdays (with the exception of WLS-TV Chicago which goes with news) and at that group and other stations Saturday slots are being filled with such shows ranging from the Muppets to Bristol-Myers' In Search of...

Among the new strips available, for prime-time access or other dayparts, the most frequently offered genre for 1980 is a throwback as opposed to a creative breakthrough. Still stinging perhaps from 1978 experiments ranging from Bonkers to Please Stand By, distributors are offering game show strips in full force.

Viacom, for example, has Feud and Truth. MCA is looking for a successful remake of Groucho Marx's You Bet Your Life with Buddy Hackett. Elsewhere, the daytime Card Sharks now is available not just on network but for local stations, from Firestone. Paramount and Post-Newsweek have Phrase It, Time-Life has Mismatch, and from Claster there's Bounce Back and from Colbert, Bullseye.

Rhodes is offering new production on Let's Make a Deal and Filmways is looking for strip customers on Hollywood Squares. Silverbach-Lazarus has Pandemonium and Metromedia Producers Corp. The Punch Lines. Sandy Frank already has his Face the Music in a variety of markets as does Victory with Match Game P.M. And that's not all the games that other distributors are hoping to get on the air.

Neither is it all the strips. Others with various formats include 20th Century-Fox's T.H.E. Hospital, Jim Victory's Wide World of People, Golden West's Melody Ranch, Lexington Broadcasting Service's new Sha Na Na strip, Air Time International's Fantasies Fulfilled, Gold Key International's Camp Wilderness and Rhodes's Just Between Us.

Then there are those like Time-Life's Dave Allen at Large from Britain and T.A.T.'s The Sullivans, and Worldvision Enterprises' Don Lane Show, already airing.

The continual growth of stripping may be more apparent this year than before, but as a trend it is not new. What is, however, is the amount of push behind talk and variety. Group W Productions now has The John Davidson Show in the fold instead of Mike Douglas. MCA TV has the NBC O&O's for Toni Tennille.

Others vying for a place are Columbia's Steve Edwards Show, Colbert's Bert Convy Show and Worldvision's Don Lane.

Whether Mike Douglas can successfully be syndicated as a barter show is up to Syndicast Services now that his contract hasn't been renewed by Group W. The future of 20th Century-Fox's Dinah & Friends is questioned by many.

Some of these new shows run more along the conventional talk and variety lines than others. And there are more vehicles such as Viacom/Post-Newsweek's Hitt' Home, Victory's Wide World of People and Group W's Hour magazine that go off more in the features direction.

Elsewhere, the variety of the NATPE marketplace will range from Fox's Monte Carlo show to United Artists' Pink Panther, NTA's Future Flipper and Y&R Program Services' The B.B. Beagle Show.

Off-network shows available range from Barnaby Jones (which is included among the 650 hours that Worldvision is offering at NATPE) to Columbia's Charlie's Angels and Family, and Warner Bros. Television's Welcome Back, Kotter.

The U.S. participation in the summer Olympics in Moscow may be questionable but MCA TV has the Road to Moscow, Fox, the Olympiad and Syndicast Services, Olympic Gold. And that's only part of the sports programming available, including Television Syndication Group's Sports Scrapbook.

Elsewhere in the variety of the NATPE marketplace: miniseries such as Paramount's Washington Behind Closed Doors, Operation Prime Time and Golden Circle shows, movie packages, and types as different as M.A. Kempner's TV-Powwww, Group W's P.M. Magazine, American Television Syndication's Sensational Seventies, Silverbach-Lazarus' The Little Hobo and Biography II, Fremantle's Star Tracks, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's It's Your Business, JWT Syndication's Three for the Road and Alcare Communications's How About...

Bazaar by the bay

The following companies will be exhibiting programs or services in the suites of the Hilton hotel during the NATPE convention. The three networks have their suites in the St. Francis hotel. Listed are the programs (with the number of episodes in parentheses) and the personnel attending. New programs are indicated with an asterisk.

In January, 1975, the Jeffersons said goodbye to the Bunkers, moved to a fashionable East Side apartment, their own TV series, and an impressive 45 share.

Capitalizing on The Jeffersons' unique ability to attract an audience, CBS used it as their prime time workhorse, moving it ten times over the next five years. With each move, The Jeffersons not only increased the average rating of the time period, but also out-performed its new lead-in and lead-out series.

Today, when a single time period change can turn last year's hit into this year's also-ran, The Jeffersons remains solidly in the Top Ten, enjoying its highest ratings ever.

GINGOLD

"Let's be us."

Chuck Gingold, 1979 President of NATPE, was Director of Programming for KATU-TV, Portland, Oregon, when we interviewed him. Recently, he accepted a similar position at WABC-TV, New York City. It's a different station, but we think his words are still pertinent.

"My first real job was a tiny little station in Redding, California. I did everything. Everything imaginable. That little station was probably the key to whatever knowledge I have today. I was announcer/director, I was a promotion manager, I did my own switching, I even loaded the projectors. I've been through the chairs. And that's helped give me credibility in my current job. If someone says something can or can't be done, I say, 'Hey, I've been there.'

"The programmer's job is more challenging than ever. Not too many years ago, we had to educate the advertisers as to what television was. We had to teach them to accept our products—especially marketers who were oriented toward print. Now TV is recognized as a dynamic sales tool. The big job isn't selling the medium, it's selling the programming. That puts the pressure on the program director.

"I keep telling my people not to imitate but to innovate. I tell them not to try to be some other show. Let's be us. Let's localize. We have a program called 'Sunday Morning,' which is a full 90 minutes of mostly field pieces. The idea was to get away from the Sunday morning 'talking-head ghetto.' We got good ratings with this concept.

"There are people out there who don't wear size four hats, you know, people who are interested in issues. It's encouraging when your local production wins good audiences. Success spawns success.

"The station uses both film and tape. Film is very important to us. There is a certain mood that film captures. I would rather do a sensitive documentary on film. There are lots of programs out of Hollywood that I can't imagine being shot on anything but film.

"The public responds when their regular programs get pre-empted. When you start fooling with their habits and you say their favorite program will not be seen that night, they get angry. The only time we pre-empt network is for local events or a documentary.

"I think a program director should be a motivator. It is my job to instill enthusiasm. It is my job to say, 'Hey, you're not going to lose your jobs if we lose some points. You're doing the best job you can. Now let's talk about what we can do to make programming better.'

"A lot of kids today come in with a vested suit and attaché case and they want my job. I would say to them, 'Be humble. Be humble, and be willing to say, 'I'll sweep the floor, I'll take any job you give me.' I spoke to a seminar recently and the first question asked of me was, 'Do you make good money?' I asked them if they wanted to know what I made during my first ten years. We all had to pay our dues."

Would you believe... Maxwell Smart and company beat out both "The Doctors" and "My Three Sons" in Los Angeles early afternoon programming?

Would you believe it tied "As The World Turns"? Well, you should, because they're both facts. And here's something else to consider. KCOP in L.A. stripped GET SMART in several of its key time periods every day!

Because it works! With solid ratings. And broad audience appeal. That's why GET SMART ran for over five years on network. And that's why over 60 markets, including New York, Boston, Chicago, Baltimore and Atlanta believe in the crazy antics of Don Adams and Barbara Feldon.

The day can start with wake-up exercises led by American Television Syndication's Ed Allen in the San Francisco Hilton's Franciscan Room (8-8:30 a.m.) and end with a preview of Orion Pictures' "Simon" at the Warwick Theater.

Eastman Kodak will be host in the delegate and spouse lounge in the Hilton's California Room. Columbia Pictures Television is taking care of coffee breaks. Iris award nominees can be screened in the Hilton's Walnut A Room.

On Sunday morning (Feb. 17), there's a choice of a Rex Humbard gospel breakfast (9-10:15, Imperial Ballroom) or a Catholic mass celebrated by Father Ellwood Kieser (9:30-10:15, Pacific Room). The NATPE Clairol Crown tennis tournament for spouses and guests, from Lexington Broadcast Services on behalf of Bristol-Myers Co., runs from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the San Francisco Tennis Club.

On Monday, courtesy of Multimedia Program Productions, there's a Phil Donahue brunch and show for spouses and guests at the Hyatt Hotel, Union Square, from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. That evening, there's a screening of An Evening in Brazil, from the Public Broadcasting Service, Viacom and TV Globo of Brazil (Continental Ballrooms 4,5 and 6), or the "Simon" Hollywood preview, (9-11 p.m., Warwick Theater).

Tuesday afternoon, Group W Productions is providing a John Davidson brunch and show (11:30 a.m.-2 p.m., Venetian Room, Fairmont hotel). Tuesday night, after the Iris awards and dinner, Colbert Television Sales and Barry & Enright are offering cocktails, dessert and the dance music of Ernie Heckscher and the Fairmont Society Orchestra (10 p.m.-1:30 a.m., Imperial Ballroom). Or from Twentieth Century-Fox Television, there's cocktails, dessert and dancing at a Fox Fanfare Party (10 p.m.-1:30 a.m., Hilton Plaza Ballroom).

For events outside the Hilton hotel, transportation will be provided.

The man who makes '60 Minutes' tick

CBS's Don Hewitt is the behind-the-scenes executive producer who has shaped it into TV's number-one program

This season's television phenomenon may well be 60 Minutes. The newsmagazine consistently has led the ratings, generically out of place at or near the top of the prime-time program list which customarily is the home of situation comedies such as Three's Company, dramas such as Dallas or the wholesomeness of Eight is Enough.

Not only is 60 Minutes on top, but by a considerable margin. The closest any show comes to its 28.8 rating and 46 share so far this season is Three's Company and it is almost two full rating points behind.

How a news show got there can be chalked up to experience (it's now into its 12th season), celebrity (Mike Wallace, Morley Safer, Dan Rather and Harry Reasoner) or professional expertise. And as important is the style of documentary journalism of Executive Producer Don Hewitt, who in fact hates the word "documentary."

"It's the worst word in the world. People don't like to read documents. Who wants to watch something called a documentary?" Hewitt asks. As ratings continually show, people generally don't like to watch documentaries. But they do watch 60 Minutes.

The Hewitt touch? That perhaps is explained best by his feeling toward a CBS

Reports: The Illegal Aliens back in the 1960's.

"Call it The Gonzalez Brothers," Hewitt remembers suggesting, "and the ads would say ... 'Come along tonight and watch the immigration service chase two wetbacks through the back alleys of Los Angeles.'"

Dramatic flair aside, the Hewitt method was clear even then: "Once you get them, then you can inform them."

While doing documentaries for CBS in 1965-68 (after producing the CBS Evening News, first with Douglas Edwards, then with Walter Cronkite), Hewitt claims to have realized that no matter which network, all documentaries were getting about the same ratings. His logical conclusion was that the same people were watching them all. The problem was attracting the others.

The goal, as Hewitt explained, was "to make the information more palatable, to get the guy who turned the set off after I Love Lucy to leave it on."

"I said to myself: 'I bet if we went multisubject in the hour, had no theme, disparate stories, if we made it very, very personal journalism'—and I don't mean advocacy journalism; we made it personally oriented to Mike Wallace and Harry Reasoner [the first co-editors]—"

"If we package reality as attractively as Hollywood packages fiction, I'll bet we could double the audience share." Well, we've done better than that."

As Hewitt is quick to admit, scheduling has played an important part in 60 Minutes' latter-day success. When the show was launched with an every-other-Tuesday slot, it didn't score too well at all. A move to 6 p.m. on Sunday (rotating with football) meant an improvement. But it wasn't until the newsmagazine earned a 7 p.m. Sunday position (a time the FCC has mandated for network news, public affairs or children's fare) that it took off.

"We achieved our success because we were opposite two kids shows and we didn't have very much competition," Hewitt says. But that was the initial reason, he adds and "that's not the story of our success any more."

"The story of our success I think is that we are one of the only, strong viewing habits in television. The first [being] Milton Berle on Tuesday night for Texaco. Today, as far as I know there are only two things on television around which people plan their week; pro football on Sunday afternoon and 60 Minutes."

Has the show achieved such standing because it is the continuing adventures of Mike, Morley, Dan and Harry? That's a question Hewitt is used to hearing. He answers that "I used to think it was. I'm not so sure I believe that any more."

"There is a certain truth to the fact," he explains, "that people tune in because they get a fix on four guys and are interested in what [they] are up to tonight." It's there that the "personal journalism" comes in.

So when the government invited 60

GREED, NEGLECT BREED SLUMS

MONROE, Louisiana—About 30 percent of the rental housing in Monroe was classified as substandard by the federal government.

Both Gannett newspapers in town, the Monroe Morning World and the News-Star, investigated why so much of the city's housing was so run-down.

Who was to blame? What could be done about it?

The investigation revealed a history of greed, neglect and indifference.

The city's poor, elderly, disabled and handicapped very often simply could not afford Monroe's better homes, and the landlords and local government were part of the problem.

People were living in small wooden shacks built nearly 100 years ago. These sharecropper shanties were usually without heating, toilets or running water.

Landlords were reluctant to make improvements because that would cut into their profits.

The city was unwilling to do anything because the slumlords were heavy political contributors or, in some instances, the city fathers themselves were slum landlords.

In a series of well-illustrated reports, the Monroe newspapers brought these conditions to light, named names and pressed for the enforcement of housing codes. As a result, the city has reorganized its enforcement machinery, and low-rent housing is being built. Housing conditions are improving for the poor people of Monroe.

This is the kind of tough, honest, independent journalism of which all of us at Gannett are most proud.

The efforts of the Monroe newspapers symbolize the professionalism, independence and dedication to community service we all share.

At Gannett, we have a commitment to freedom in every business we're in, whether it's newspaper, TV, radio, outdoor advertising, documentary filmmaking, or public opinion research.

And so from Cleveland to Coffeyville, from Port Huron to Port Chester, every Gannett newspaper, television, and radio station is free to express its own opinions. Each is free to serve the best interests of its own community in its own way.

the Truth"

The super-charged new "Truth" is geared to a new generation of young adults. And to the changing lifestyles and interests of a new decade.

It introduces a magnetic new host, Robin Ward!

Hand picked by Goodson-Todman, the same host-makers who developed Garry Moore, Gene Rayburn, Richard Dawson, John Charles Daly and Bill Cullen as star hosts.

Variety says, "First indications among tv-rep programmers in New York is that "Truth" could end up as the most formidable of the new game show strips."

DARK SIDE OF A CITY, YOU CAN'T WITH BRIGHT LIGHTS."

Henry Sheppard,
WCCO-TV, MINNEAPOLIS

"There are news-gathering and documentary situations where the use of artificial light is just too intrusive or difficult to achieve," says Henry Sheppard, Chief Engineer of WCCO-TV, the CBS affiliate in Minneapolis.

"That's why our Sony portable BVP-300 cameras are such a big plus. With them, we can shoot in low-light conditions and get a lot of detail other cameras might not pick up. We even get good pictures with as little as two footcandles of light."

WCCO-TV owns seven Sony BVP-300's, which the station's photographers use together with Sony BVU-50 recorders. The cameras are used to shoot public-affairs programs and segments of PM Magazine, as well as for ENG and documentaries.

"We're very particular about picture quality," says Sheppard. "And before we committed ourselves to Sony, we evaluated just about every portable color camera available."

"Sony's colorimetry is excellent, its signal-to-noise ratio is high, and it always turns out pictures that meet our standards. Many of our engineers find its quality comparable to studio cameras. And our photographers like the way Sony handles. For example, in a helicopter, they can cradle the camera on one shoulder to reduce vibrations and get a very steady picture."

"And with the Sony system, each photographer can operate independently, without a second person along to monitor sound."

When asked about Sony durability, Sheppard replied: "We don't coddle our cameras here. Each one gets handled by about 15 or 20 different photographers. They come in in the morning, grab their equipment, throw it into the back of the car, and they're off. Sony takes that kind of treatment remarkably well, and it's a good thing, because we can't afford to have our cameras down."

Of course, Sony makes a full line of one-inch broadcast equipment, including cameras, recorders, editors and the BVT-2000 digital time base corrector.

Minutes to send a camera crew, but no co-editor, with James Schlesinger to China, Hewitt turned down the offer. "60 Minutes was told there was no room on the plane for Mike Wallace, Morley Safer or Dan Rather [it was before Harry Reasoner's return to the show]. And I said 'thanks a lot but no thanks.' That's like asking Scotty Reston [of the New York Times] if he'd like to send his typewriter but there's no room for him."

It's a case in point of the Hewitt/60 Minutes philosophy. He sums up: "Our audience is interested in what [the co-editors] found out," not in an "impersonal narrator."

That means taking a stand, not to the point of advocacy journalism, but without disregarding the fact that journalists too can draw conclusions. Take Harry Reasoner's remarks at the end of a piece on the glut of aid the U.S. has given Micronesia. He concluded: "We have tried to make over a society and we have botched it," adding, however, that if our goal was to make the islands dependent on America, "then we have succeeded beautifully."

Over the years, Hewitt says, the best characterization of the broadcast probably has come from Neil Shister who, writing on the Op-Ed page of the Miami Herald called 60 Minutes, a series of "Morality plays"—wherein, for example, Mike Wallace may never say he's against palimony but the audience knows for sure he doesn't think it's a good idea.

Hewitt spells it out: "If you don't have a point of view, nobody can get a fix on you. You're just shoveling information . . . but I defy anyone over the years to ever peg this broadcast as being right or left." For himself, Hewitt claims, "I am completely apolitical."

A key, Hewitt says, is that "unlike other hour-long news broadcasts, I think we were the first that . . . was not concerned with issues but was concerned with stories that maybe illuminate issues. I'm not interested in the issue of the environment; I'm interested in a story about the environment."

As for his staff, Hewitt—a man who doesn't bother with modesty when it comes to his show and his people—comments that "it is no coincidence that the four most popular news broadcasters in history are also the four hardest working." Morley Safer, for example, was said to have had only eight weekends at home last year, like the others having to split their time with five producers each.

The only person behind-the-scenes Hewitt will single out is senior producer Palmer Williams. "He's the guy that walks in here and says to me 'You're full of crap' and 'That's a terrible idea' or 'That's a good idea.'" Williams has been with Hewitt and 60 Minutes since the program's inception.

In all, 60 Minutes operates with 21 producers, 21 film editors, four or five researchers and others—all told about 75 people. Hewitt reports little attrition and an "indefinable something called psychic energy." It is just that "psychic energy," he contends, that has prevented equally successful versions of 60 Minutes from showing up on the other networks. The structure of the show can be mimicked, as can the organizational plan but without the newsmagazine's own interplay, "the rest is a memo."

At any given time, Hewitt has about 20 pieces to choose from in assembling each Sunday broadcast. Each of the four co-editors has five producers working on stories. Hewitt says the co-editor/producer responsibility for each piece is about 50/50; a producer may be longer on the scene, laying the groundwork for the on-air correspondent, but thereafter the co-editor shapes it on the scene and in the editing room.

Hewitt describes himself as "sort of like a play doctor. I go from cutting room to cutting room. It's a little like a doctor on call." He claims to have no ambition for higher level executive positions in the network news division or elsewhere in the corporation. (He says he's never been offered the CBS News presidency.) "It doesn't interest me in the least," he says, "I like getting my hands dirty . . . And I find that executive jobs don't give you the opportunity . . ." The success of 60 Minutes after several long years, Hewitt says, has changed his life "almost not one iota."

As for the show itself, Hewitt believes the editing and the writing have improved with age. Hewitt calls himself "a bug on copy . . . It's your ear that keeps you tuned to your television set maybe more than your eye." In a sense too, Hewitt is a copy editor. When Wallace, Safer, Rather and Reasoner are recording in the studio, he frequently turns his "back on the screen" to listen, for a wrong inflection or a pause too short. It's "all part of editing," he adds.

Hewitt says "I don't know what the budget is" for the program, and adds "So help me God" when that remark brings skepticism. He expects that "it's somewhere between $175,000 and $200,000" per week but claims not to really know for sure. Others have characterized the top-rated show as even more of a bargain: at $140,000 excluding studio and equipment costs ("Closed Circuit," Jan. 21).

Following the adage that nothing breeds success like success, 60 Minutes has spawned its share of both local and network newsmagazines. Regarding the other networks' versions, Hewitt comments that ABC News's 20/20 started out to be "radically different from 60 Minutes" and "fell right on its face." Now that it has come closer to the 60 Minutes formula, he says, it has picked up. As for NBC's News's Prime Time Saturday, he only says it is "going nowhere."

Hewitt too had problems when he was assigned to produce another magazine for CBS News a few years back. With the ill-fated Who's Who, Hewitt explains, the staff never was able to come up with the same "psychic energy" as 60 Minutes. The difficulty, however, went further than that.

He explains: "If you want to do a show like Who's Who about people, you have to get a little bit tabloid, a little bit what Barbara Walters does with her specials, a little bit more into the People magazine kind of thing. I think CBS News thought that would be damaging to its reputation. So it was neither fish nor fowl. If you're going to do Shirley MacLaine, you have to answer the question: What is Shirley MacLaine really like? and [Who's Who] didn't answer the question."

Back to the other networks, Hewitt claims it is not their programs that are the true competition for 60 Minutes. Rather, he says the competition is the "distractions in the household" at 7 p.m. Sundays. "If the kid says to his father: 'help me with my homework' in the middle of 60 Minutes and the father says: 'Yes,' I'm a loser. If the father says: 'Honey, can you come back at eight o'clock,' I'm a winner."

Hewitt isn't pressing his luck with 60 Minutes. To a network executive who once asked if 60 Minutes could be done every night at 10-11 p.m., Hewitt said no because the "psychic energy would be so dissipated" and "it would no longer be a force." He explained that is the reason for summer repeats: "You have to have a down time."

The executive producer, however, does have his ideas. One that hasn't managed to win higher level approval is a 60

News views. Eighty-five percent of those surveyed in a Los Angeles Times poll regularly watch television news, compared to 74% who said they regularly follow political and governmental news by reading newspapers.

Telephone interviews of 1,047 adults—including 766 registered voters—on Dec. 16-18, 1979, found the Iran hostage situation the most interesting running news story. Ninety-two percent of those polled said they were following it "closely." Next most closely followed issues were the energy and gas shortage (86%), price rises and declines (78%), relations between Israel and the Arab countries (52%) and the presidential campaign (51%).

Only one in 10 surveyed wanted less presidential campaign news while slightly more than half wanted more. In "good" over "poor" comparisons, those polled approved of Chapquiddick coverage 2 to 1. But almost half also said they wanted less news about the incident, with one-fourth wanting more news. Forty-two percent of those surveyed called coverage of Senator Edward Kennedy's campaign "fair," while 30%—particularly Republicans—said the press is making the candidate look "better" than he really is and 23% said the press is making him look "worse" than he really is.

Sixty-three percent of those polled said Republican hopeful Ronald Reagan was getting "fair" coverage, with 17% saying he was made to look "better" and 12% "worse" than he really is. President Carter was believed to be treated fairly by 59% of those surveyed, and Republican contender, George Bush, was believed to be treated fairly by 46%.

Minutes anthology show. Another—and the only feature he says he would right now like to add to the newsmagazine—is more satire beyond that currently offered by Andy Rooney.

(Point/counterpoint disappeared from 60 Minutes several months ago when Shana Alexander, the liberal antagonist, quit; Hewitt's wife, Marilyn Berger of the Public Broadcasting Service's Special Edition, was among the contenders to replace Alexander, a choice which was not to be made by Hewitt. CBS decided, however, to drop the feature and Hewitt's own guess is that only about a third of his audience misses the interplay.)

Regarding satire, Hewitt says: "I have spent more time, money and effort trying to develop" something "beyond the fringe" yet still able to fit within the 60 Minutes format. Input from Chicago's Second City troupes was considered as was an animated version of current 60 Minutes satirist Andy Rooney. "I even went so far as to see if I could get a guy to draw Andy Rooney," Hewitt explains. "So Andy Rooney would lip sync to a character called Andy."

Hewitt admits that "humor is very fragile" and "I think it scares my bosses." But he adds that if he came up with something he truly thought would work, he probably would get the go-ahead because CBS News President "Bill Leonard and I seem to be on the same wavelength."

While the stars of 60 Minutes are Wallace, Safer, Rather and Reasoner and not Hewitt, the executive producer claims not to mind that he doesn't share the same celebrity status. He says he gets enough of it and, with the exception of Norman Lear, is probably the television producer most associated with a show. At basics, however, he says the important recognition comes from "most people I care about"—those in journalism and the arts.

Much of that recognition has come from those in praise of the crime and corruption-busting nature of the journalistic team and the over-all newsworthiness of the pieces. (Hewitt notes that he doesn't worry about lead-times and delays in airing stories because often enough "the fact that 60 Minutes did it makes it news.")

But he also has faced heat. There are those who have complained about sensationalism. And with the interviews with the Ayatollah Khomeini late last year, for example, Hewitt took it personally for 60 Minutes when the New York Times editorialized that the networks may have been used. Hewitt shot back a published letter to the editor questioning how often the New York Times probably has been used, in part reading, "Let's face it, because you cover a lot more news than anyone else, you are ipso facto 'used' a lot more often than anyone else."

Hewitt may not get the mass attention of his co-editors but he has a star's contract. Now 57, Hewitt is legally bound to CBS until the network's mandatory retirement age of 65. And he's in demand; he recalls that NBC President "Fred Silverman once said to me: 'If you should ever

Changing times. Imminence of delivery of news direct to consumers by electronic means is subject of report by Journalism Resources Institute at Idaho State University. Titled "Goodbye (Almost) To Newsprint," report is available for $1 expense charge from nonprofit institute at Box 8242, Idaho State University, Pocatello 83209. Thomas L. McPhail, associate professor of journalism at Carlton University, Ottawa, supports institute findings by maintaining, "The door-to-door newspaper had better be getting ready for retirement." During next decade, he writes, certain newspaper services will be slowly transferred to computerized cable-delivered systems. Show me. Florida Supreme Court Chief Justice Arthur J. England made pitch for opening courtroom to cameras in speech at two-day Chicago conference of state chief justices. And to illustrate unobtrusiveness of broadcast cameras, Gary Cummings, director of station services at WBBM-TV Chicago, followed England to podium and ran videotape of England's speech, recorded quietly by minicam. Also there to speak in behalf of cameras in courtroom were Edward Cowart, judge who presided at highly publicized trial of Theodore Bundy, which Tribute. ABC News and Ohio State University have established William D. Stewart Broadcast Journalism Lectureship, honoring correspondent killed on assignment last June in Nicaragua. Donations can be sent to Bill Stewart Memorial Fund, developmental fund, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio, 43210.

Be prepared. Instead of reporting what the price of gasoline, food or housing has been, Westinghouse Broadcasting's KYW-TV Philadelphia is telling viewers where economy may be going in next 90 days in city. Station commissioned study by University of Pennsylvania's Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates and began running at least two weeks of reports on early and late evening news last Monday (Feb. 4). Wharton will update Philadelphia economic model quarterly and KYW-TV will report results.

Newsroom protection. New York Governor Hugh Carey last week called for passage of legislation that would require law enforcement officials to have court subpoenas, rather than just search warrants, before looking for information in newsrooms. It's another Carey push for bill that didn't make it through state legislature's last session. Bill still would allow use of search warrants, however, if belief is that documents might be otherwise destroyed.

No small matter. Jim Schultz, assistant bureau chief of Cable News Network's essentially nonexistent Washington bureau, is hard at work trying to create staff. He and George Watson, tapped as bureau chief, are only ones on board so far. But Schultz is looking for one senior producer, three producers, 10 correspondents, three assignment editors, four desk assistants, two graphic artists, three secretaries and 24 technicians. First task is to sort through 600-700 resumes received at Atlanta headquarters and forwarded to Schultz's temporary suburban Washington office. Schultz said he'll move to permanent bureau at 2133 Wisconsin Avenue in town in four to six weeks.

Even-up effort. International Institute of Communications and Twentieth Century Fund plan to establish committee to examine and make recommendations for dealing with problems organizations say are created by imbalances in flow of information around world. Committee will be selected from among leaders in communications field from industrialized countries and Third World. IIC and Twentieth Century Fund representatives will develop plans for funding work of committee and appoint its members by April.

A detailed black and white photograph of an Ikegami HK-357A video camera mounted on a tripod. The camera is a large, professional-grade unit with a prominent lens assembly on the right side, a viewfinder on top, and various control dials and buttons on the front and side. The brand name 'IKEGAMI' is visible on the front panel. The camera is positioned diagonally across the frame, with the tripod legs extending towards the bottom left.

Ikegami's third microprocessor-controlled camera reduces registration set-up time and cost

The ideal camera for field broadcast television assignments must meet three major criteria. It must be air-ready moments after arrival at the camera site. It must deliver pictures of studio-quality color, crispness, and clarity. And it must be consistently reliable.

The Ikegami HK-357A meets those criteria in the field and is equally suitable as a studio camera. And it allows the camera crew to concentrate on creative aspects of their assignment instead of on time-consuming set-up and readjustment tasks.

Once on-site, the HK-357A requires hook-up to only three cables and power source. Then, a push of the microprocessor activate button automatically cycles it through a check and recheck of all set-up and registration adjustments. This takes approximately 45 seconds per camera (up to six cameras can be handled). No external registration and chip charts are necessary because a test pattern projector (diascope) is built into the lens. Camera distance from the compact base station can be nearly a mile with triax, or 2,000 feet with TV-81 multi-core cable.

Because the HK-357A optimizes the capabilities of the newly developed Diode Gun Plumbicon®, the picture output is of very high resolution, low lag, low noise and wide dynamic range. Dynamic Beam Stretch to reduce corner tailing; Geometric Correction for near-perfect registration; auto iris and auto white balance — all contribute to the superior color picture program output of this camera.

The HK-357A is notably versatile too. It offers selectable contrast compression levels; built-in chroma keyer; gen-lock to Sync and SC or VBS/BBS; and several other features, including an unusually compact CCU, optional RCU, tiltable and rotatable 7-inch high-resolution electronic viewfinder.

The performance record of Ikegami cameras at the major networks in the United States and around the world attests to their consistent reliability and long, trouble-free service life.

If you are upgrading, a demonstration may well reveal that the other cameras you've considered may already be obsolete when compared against the HK-357A.

get out of [the contract], I'll give you two floors of the RCA Building."

How much does the success of 60 Minutes say for the news business in general? Hewitt doesn't know if it says anything. To bring home the point he asks rhetorically, "Does the New York Times say anything about newspapering in general?" and answers: "Probably not."

He even questions whether a 60 Minutes-style segment would be a workable feature within the CBS Evening News with Walter Cronkite for example. "I'm not sure that the frame of mind when they watch the evening news isn't at a faster pace," he says, "I'm not sure if they would stop for this."

What he is secure about, however, is the future of 60 Minutes, which he believes is "a permanent fixture in television, just like the evening news."

NBC was right on top when sting story broke

Investigative team had followed story for weeks, even managing to tape FBI informing congressmen under investigation; others have to scramble to come up with reports

Early in NBC's evening news program on Saturday, Feb. 2, correspondent Brian Ross went on the air with a report of the Federal Bureau of Investigation sting operation in which one senator and seven members of Congress were said to be targets of a bribery investigation.

The broadcast, which was followed later that evening with a fuller report on the network's Prime Time Saturday, climaxed two months of investigative work by the 31-year-old Ross, who works out of the network's New York bureau, and his partner, field producer Ira Silverman, 44, who is based in Washington. It was a job so thoroughly done that NBC, using the tools of the television trade, was able to get pictures of the comings and goings at a house used by the FBI agents, as well as of agents knocking on the targets' doors to inform them of the investigation.

It was not, however, a clear beat over the competition. In the day and a half that led up to the FBI men fanning out over Washington to notify eight members of Congress they were under investigation, Washington began springing a number of leaks. And both ABC and CBS, working hard against the clock, managed to avoid being beaten on the story.

ABC News in Washington got a tip regarding a sting operation involving the FBI on Friday. The next morning, the bureau's new chief, Carl Bernstein, received a similar piece of information indicating the investigation involved members of Congress, and he called in a half-dozen correspondents and assigned them to the story. ABC was shut out of early evening television since its only news program on Saturday is at 11 p.m. But Tim O'Brien, reporting from Chicago, was on ABC Radio at 7:30 p.m. EST with a 35-second piece on the sting operation. And at 11 p.m., ABC-TV presented a four-minute, fleshed out wrap-up on the story.

At CBS News, White House correspondent Bob Pierpoint got wind of the story Saturday morning, and contacted CBS's courts and Justice Department correspondent, Fred Graham, who was covering the American Bar Association meeting in Chicago. Between them, and with the help of Elizabeth Midgely and Jan McDaniel in the Washington news bureau, they put together a story regarding a "sting operation" that had ensnared a senator and nine members of the House of Representatives that Graham broadcast on the 6:30 p.m. news. "We had to scramble," Washington bureau chief Ed Fouhy says. "And we did." Fouhy himself had helped oversee the work from La Costa, Calif., where he was attending a CBS meeting.

NBC was not alone in having advance information on the story. The New York Times and Newsday, on Long Island, had also been working on it for some time before breaking it in their Sunday (Feb. 3) editions. (The Washington Post, playing catch-up ball, also managed a reasonably complete story for its Sunday paper.)

Despite the lead NBC had on the story, CBS was first on the air with the names of six of the targets—though it obtained them from the Times early Sunday edition. Graham did not have names when he went on the air with the lead item; anchorman Bob Schieffer reported them—with credit to the Times—toward the end of the half hour. (O'Brien had only one name—Senator Harrison Williams [D-N.J.]—on ABC's 7:30 p.m. radio broadcast, but ABC reported the eight names later in the evening.)

NBC had chosen not to use the names in Ross's initial report because the targets themselves had not yet been informed. Indeed, FBI agents were knocking on Williams's door at about the time the 6:30 p.m. reports were being aired.

The stories themselves created a controversy. Members of Congress expressed concern about the disclosure of information regarding an investigation of colleagues who had not been indicted. That concern, in turn, prompted the Justice Department to initiate an investigation into the source of the leaks, and to express regret over the media's disclosures because "they may injure the reputations of innocent people." And most of those named denied, on camera, wrongdoing.

Ross, who with Silverman has done a number of investigative pieces for the NBC evening news, learned from various "sources" that the FBI probe was under way. He and Silverman kept in touch with developments as they unfolded in the three cities involved—Washington, New York and Philadelphia.

Their sources last month were able to tell them the location of the house in northwest Washington (rented, coincidentally, from a Washington Post reporter based in New York) that the FBI agents, in their guise of wealthy Arabs and their representatives, used as a base for operation ABSCAM (Arab scam). So about one week before the story eventually broke, NBC rented two Winnebago vans, fitted them with tinted windows and stationed one at each end of the block on which the house is located. Inside the van, camera crews, using night vision lenses capable of amplifying available light 30,000 times, watched on a round-the-clock basis, apparently unobserved. And as men with brief cases came and went, they were videotaped from the vans. Finally, Ross and Silverman were tipped that the FBI was about to let the targets in on the investigation. Correspondents were brought in from out of town to reinforce NBC's resources in Washington, and each of the eight homes was staked out—which is how NBC managed to have pictures of FBI agents being admitted to Williams's house and of Williams talking to NBC reporters after the agents left.

NBC managed to maintain tight security on its activities in covering the story. Originally, Ross and Silverman informed only NBC News President William Small of what they were onto. Later, as the story appeared to be building in Washington, NBC's bureau chief there, Sid Davis, and several others—including Sylvia Westerman, news vice president, Paul Greenberg, Nightly News producer and Tom Wolzein, director of the Nightly News "Segment 3" staff—were filled in. Davis provided the support Ross and Silverman needed, in the form of additional producers and camera crews, and directed the Washington coverage.

For NBC, it was a time for basking in a bit of glory. But Small kept the focus on the investigative team involved. Ross and Silverman, he said, "did a first-rate job. . . They are as good a team as television has in investigative reporting." He noted that they have done a number of pieces for the "special segments" of the Nightly News—on Mafia links to labor and on the oil companies—among others. "It's good they're getting the recognition with this."

But NBC was not the only network that broke a major story in the last 10 days. ABC's Brit Hume went on the World News Tonight on Tuesday with a report that the FBI is investigating a suspected bribery scheme involving Teamsters Union officials and Senator Howard Cannon (D-Nev.), chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee.

Hume said others in the Washington bureau had come up with the initial information on the story "some weeks" ago. He got involved only last week, he said. The story was not "fully confirmed" by the FBI until the day ABC put it on the air.

The New York Times also had the story, and published it in its Wednesday-morning editions. But ABC could take satisfaction from the fact that the Washington Post, in its Wednesday edition, credited the network with breaking the story first, and relied on it as source material in its report of the FBI investigation.

FIGHT BACK! WITH DAVID HOROWITZ

America's foremost consumer expert in an entertaining, aggressive new series to help people avoid being ripped off!

The buying public, more than ever, needs all the help it can get. And come Fall, it'll get it from FIGHT BACK! WITH DAVID HOROWITZ.

This brand new half-hour weekly show for access features David Horowitz, nationally known for his best-selling "FIGHT BACK! and Don't Get Ripped Off" book and his frequent appearances on "The Tonight Show starring Johnny Carson." Variety recently called his 7:30 p.m. show in Los Angeles "a phenomenon . . . able to come in with double digits despite NFL football." And in print, a competitor described his proven three-year rating record as "awesome."

FIGHT BACK! WITH DAVID HOROWITZ will make consumers more aware of their rights. And give them the information and courage they need to get what they pay for.

Nothing is sacred when it comes to David Horowitz's investigative probing and prodding. And we're sparing nothing in production values. Each program will be taped largely on location, the better to challenge and test and prove and demonstrate. Other experts and celebrities will assist David in showing viewers how to Fight Back!

It's important information entertainingly packaged — with the best possible pay-off for the viewers: the money they'll be saving.

Bus and bandwagon trade views

Campaign reporting is subject of Harvard forum where campaign people say journalists seek out the sensational rather than issues

Presidential campaign reporting stresses personalities and tactics while neglecting important issues, political experts agreed last week before blaming this on one another.

Campaign managers, consultants and journalists, assembled at a three-day Harvard conference, condemned the 30-second wrap-ups, "horse race" stories and general cynicism they see marking coverage along the marathon caucus-primary route to the presidential nominations.

But when press panelists criticized candidates for ducking hard questions, political pros replied that without a good "visual," their man would never make it onto the evening news.

NBC News President William J. Small answered the charge that 30-second commercials are the only way candidates can get their "unfiltered" message to the public with the statement that it's "as important to our viewers that professional journalists observe as it is to have them hear what you want them to hear."

Blaming some of television's political coverage troubles on the equal time requirement, Small said "Congress is toying with the idea of amending equal time when instead it should be abolished." He said the courts have been wrong in not seeing the equal time requirement as a "clear violation of the First Amendment" and that this is especially "frightening" when surveys show television an increasingly important source of Americans' knowledge of the candidates.

Thomas Quinn, campaign manager for California Governor Jerry Brown, called the equal time requirements a "useful check against the abuse" of electronic journalism's power. He and several others during the panel discussions, sponsored by Harvard's Institute of Politics and the Los Angeles Times, said nightly network news should be expanded to an hour.

Two leading political consultants rapped the media or what they see as a fixation on tactics and demand for the very "hype" they condemn.

John D. Deardourff, chairman of the board of Bailey, Deardourff and Associates (and presently working on Senator Howard H. Baker's [R-Tenn.] GOP presidential campaign), said reporters tend to see campaigns through their perspective, not the voters'.

"You can say what the overwhelming majority of people want and need to know (about a candidate's stand on a major issue) in 30 seconds," Deardourff maintained. "Maybe the media elite wants more, but the intensity level of the average voter is far removed from the reader" who scrutinizes the New York Times, he added. He said press immersion in "who's up/who's down" in the polls diverts attention from the real issues. He—along with Newsweek chief political correspondent James Doyle—said the press is too concerned with reporting why a candidate said something, and whether it was a mistake to say it, than with telling the public just what he said.

John P. Marttila, president of his own consulting firm, said "serious efforts to present stands on issues without media 'hype' get no coverage."

He finds both "sanctimoniousness and cynicism" in the media's demanding something visual while complaining that candidates' campaigns lack substance.

While Jess Marlow, political reporter and anchor for KNBC-TV Los Angeles, urged networks to devote prime time to candidates' debates no matter what the ratings, former FCC Chairman Newton N. Minow recalled his own role in helping arrange the 1976 candidate debates.

Minow, chairman of the Public Broadcasting Service, said that after the Ford-Carter debates, people asked him: "Who won? Who lost?" and pronounced the whole affair "boring." He and Marlow concurred that a way had to be found to give candidates' more access to the airwaves.

A New Dimension in Remote Control With the Harris 9100

Offers Security Measures to Protect Your Capital Investment

'On-air' reliability, efficient manpower utilization, and overhead expense reductions are big cost benefits to the station owner who purchases the Harris 9100 Facilities Control.

Our building block concept allows a wide variety of applications, from complete automatic facilities control to simple remote or local control—whether AM, FM or TV.

The programming of our remote control provides continuous facility monitoring, and provides trend analysis through careful parameter logging. In addition, our system allows operation at peak performance without rule violations—saving costly fines.

Protection can be provided for the entire physical plant with monitoring and alarms for intrusion or fire.

Many routine duties of personnel can be performed automatically using the Harris 9100.

Learn all the exciting details on the Harris 9100 Facilities Control, its components, and available options. Write or Call Harris Corporation, P.O. Box 4290, Quincy, IL 62301, 217/222-8200.

coverage resembled the consultants' "We cover politicians very well, but not politics. We cover campaigns very well, but not the issues." He added that "we still insist that something has to be visually exciting. There are some damn interesting talking heads around, but we've conditioned the audience to believe that talking heads are dull."

Christopher Lydon, who anchors the 10 o'clock news on Boston's noncommercial WGBH-TV (which videotaped the Harvard sessions for re-broadcast), said television covers politics as a "real life entertainment series." In 1976, he said, we had "The Adventures of Jimmy Carter," who he said therefore entered the White House having only been a television presence.

"Like all television characters," Lydon continued, "Carter's wore out, so we have a new character, 'Jimmy as Commander in Chief.' We've got a new series on our hands."

And to justify the networks' "tremendous investment" in the Iowa caucus coverage, he claimed, Republican hopeful George Bush has been cast in the lead of "A Star is Born."

The campaign leaders, however, didn't apologize for their role in all this. The increasing number of primaries, according to Senator Edward Kennedy's delegate selection chief, Richard G. Stearns, "has made the news media the most powerful actor in the nominating process." He said that "we could spend a million dollars reasonably in each of the 50 states on television alone," and that therefore he and competitors are forced "to somehow beguile and trap the media into doing what we can't do ourselves"—give their candidates exposure.

According to Tim Kraft, national campaign manager for the Carter/Mondale presidential committee, there's a good reason White House contenders shy away from the media.

Reporters, he said, "would rather ask sharp questions about a personality to give them the lead on the evening news" than to probe the issues. "There's an adversary relationship between the press and the candidate," Kraft stated. "With the first slip of the tongue or ill-chosen word, you will do your damndest to nail him to the wall."

Programing

Another week, a different winner

ABC captures week ended Feb. 3 by narrow margin and is now tied with CBS for season-to-date

CBS-TV's six-week winning streak ended Feb. 3 when the prime-time ratings results showed ABC-TV in the winner's circle. ABC's victory wasn't by much, however—half a rating point. And while still in third place, NBC-TV turned in a better-than-usual performance.

For the week ended Feb. 3, the scores were ABC: 20.7 rating/31.4 share; CBS: 20.2/30.8, and NBC: 19.0/28.8. In season-to-date terms, CBS no longer is the sole leader (BROADCASTING, Feb. 4) but, as it was a few weeks ago, is tied with ABC. For the season's first 20 weeks, the rundown is CBS and ABC at 19.5 and NBC at 17.7.

In the 20th week, CBS's 60 Minutes again was the top-rated show (29.2/43), one of that network's six shows to make the top 10. The list continued with ABC's Three's Company (28.8/41); CBS's Dallas (28.6/44); NBC's Real People (27.9/40); CBS's Dukes of Hazzard (27.7/42), *M*A*S*H* (27.3/39) and House Calls (26.9/39); ABC's Eight is Enough and CBS's Alice (26.4/39) and NBC's Little House on the Prairie (26.0/37).

Over-all, ABC won Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday; CBS took the rest of the week. But while NBC didn't have any winning nights, it did show a strong second place on Monday and Wednesday.

While there were specials that performed well, no blockbusters emerged. In fact, the highest-scoring program that didn't fall into the regular-series category was part two of NBC's Martian Chronicles miniseries (21.2/32). ABC might have hoped for more star pulling power of Charles Bronson in "Telefon" (20.6/31) and Jill Clayburgh in "An Unmarried Woman" (18.1/29). Bob Hope's Around the World with the Troops, a three-hour special on Sunday (competing during the last two with "Telefon") brought a 20.5/30.

ABC's new entry, Tenspeed and Brownshoe, turned in another strong performance on Sunday with a 24.9/35, beating CBS's Archie Bunker's Place and One Day at a Time and the first hour of Bob Hope. A week earlier when Tenspeed premiered as a two-hour movie, Bunker had been the only half-hour slot to win against it. As a lead-in to Tenspeed, ABC has Galactica 1980, which brought in an 18.4/27 against Disney and the real competition, 60 Minutes. CBS, however, still won the night over-all with a 24.7/36.5.

While ABC has managed an improved rating picture on Sunday, it was a big loser on Monday with a rearranged schedule to make time for a sustaining Republican response to the President's state of the union address. Laverne & Shirley earned a meager 16.3/23 (in its regular time) with Family following at 16.4/23, then Stone at 13.9/21 and the Republicans at 10:30 p.m.

On Wednesday, against the sustaining Republican response on CBS, preceded by a Featherstone's Nest special (9.3/14) NBC's Real People brought in a 27.9/40 and ABC's Eight is Enough a 26.4/38.

On Friday, NBC's full night of circus animals/variety scored poorly, with Animalympics (15.0/24); Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus (14.8/23) and Siegfried & Roy (14.4/22).

On the AIR

New trade group, Association of Independent Radioproducers, forms, elects officers and board

The Association of Independent Radioproducers (AIR), in the planning stages since late last September (BROADCASTING, Oct. 29, 1979), is now a reality.

Representatives from 40 radio program production companies met on Jan. 25 in Howard Johnson's of North Hollywood and voted on preliminaries for formation of their new trade association.

Harry O'Connor of O'Connor Creative Services was elected the association's first president, and Bo Donovan of Tuesday Productions was named its first vice president. Tom Rounds of Watermark Inc. and Harvey Mednick of RKO Radio were elected secretary and treasurer, respectively.

Also elected at the meeting was a five-member board of directors: Jerry Atchley of TM Productions, Ron Harrison of Radio Arts, Charles Michelson of Charles Michelson Inc., Harvey Palish of Diamond P, and Paul Ward of Audio Stimulation. Peter Hartz of Golden Egg and Jim Kefford of Drake Chenault were elected alternate board members.

The new association hopes to end 1980 with an initial membership of at least 50 production companies and plans to initiate a direct mail campaign to recruit members. Mednick and Michelson are presently handling publicity for the fledgling organization.

A steering committee, formed last September to work toward creation of AIR, had initially hoped to hold the association's first general membership meeting in conjunction with the April National Association of Broadcasters convention in Las Vegas (BROADCASTING, Dec 3, 1979). Instead, it was decided at last week's meeting that the association will work toward better representation of independent program producers at the NAB radio programing conference scheduled for August in New Orleans.

Facilitating that project will be Rounds, who has been appointed to NAB's steering committee charged with planning that conference. Tentatively in the sights for the radio programing conference, according to RKO's Mednick, is an AIR board of directors meeting for the purpose of planning future strategy.

A VERY GOOD YEAR.

1979 was a very good year for radio at Outlet Broadcasting.

First, we added two fine major-market stations – WIOQ-FM, Philadelphia and WQRS-FM, Detroit. That increased our nationwide radio holdings to seven stations, including four in Top Ten markets, from Washington, D.C. to Los Angeles.

Second, we created a Radio Station Group with dynamic new management charged with achieving our ultimate goal of the full complement of radio stations.

Third, we began a program of upgrading facilities to back our news and entertainment leadership with technical excellence.

Arming themselves

Machinists union begins educating its members to the finer points of broadcast regulation, including petitions to deny, to improve TV's image of workers

The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers has begun its monitoring of network programming to rectify what it considers the "bum rap" given the American blue-collar worker by television programmers.

IAM began its monitoring campaign last fall, with a series of workshops to educate its members on how the broadcast industry is regulated and must be responsive to the public interest. The workshops, conducted by William M. Young & Associates of Chicago, focused on the public's right to file petitions to deny a station's license renewal (BROADCASTING, Sept. 3, 1979). Young, who conducted similar workshops for the PTA and is now contracted to work with Phi Delta Kappa, the educational society ("Closed Circuit," Feb. 4), used basically the same manual he used with the PTA.

The manual stresses three areas in which the public can involve itself in the industry—the broadcasters themselves, advertisers and the FCC. A large part of the workshop is dedicated to teaching the participants how to monitor television.

The IAM had 14 of these training sessions from October through November, teaching 450 IAM members who in turn went to their own communities teaching and explaining the program to members.

The monitoring program seeks to document how union characters are portrayed in entertainment television, and how the news depicts them, along with such issues as inflation, energy, national health care, tax reform and foreign trade.

Robert Kalaski, director of communications for IAM, said: "All we want is a fair picture of the union worker. Sure, we're stressing the petition to deny thing, but what we want is for the broadcasters to know we're willing to negotiate our differences that's what unions are all about."

The results of the monitoring process

PlayBack

The clubs, they are a changin'. People patronizing discos "don't want to hear anything they haven't already heard on the radio," says J.J. Searles, who spins records in a southern Maryland club and consults three others in the area. Searles says people who last year "were into touch dancing and hearing the newest in dance music" are this year returning to "free-form, boogie-type dancing" and requesting music from the sixties, both oldies and remakes. Young people as well as adults are requesting oldies, says Searles, and music of Credence Clearwater Revival is very popular right now. Also different in clubs this year is volume at which music is played. Last year, says Searles, speakers were turned up to "assault" levels, or highest volume. This year, they are at less than one-quarter capability, because, "people want to sit and converse as well as dance."

New in public affairs. Ohio State University Communications Services has changed its approach to public affairs program production and since late last December, has been offering Lifestyles, five-day-a-week, two-and-a-half-minute syndicated informational radio programs. Often in interview format, programs cover topics of general interest, including energy, consumerism and medicine, and, as university public relations activity, are offered free, with only stipulation being return of tapes for re-use. Program is currently heard on 30 U.S. radio stations in markets including Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Baltimore, Hartford, Honolulu, Phoenix, St. Paul, Minn., Beaumont, Tex., and Sarasota, Fla.

Important outsiders. Novelty records, many of them comic, rarely surface on BROADCASTING's Playlist, which last week was expanded from top 50 to top 100 airplay survey of contemporary records, and is now mailed ahead of magazine. Such records, though rarely reported to Playlist, are often valuable programming tools. John Young, program director at wzgc(FM) Atlanta, reports morning airplay of Ray Stevens's current novelty, Shriner's Convention (RCA) is generating considerable phone response. WGAR(AM) Cleveland is highlighting top novelty records of 70's in "Kulture Korner," nightly feature aired in late drive time.

News plus music. Progressive Radio Network, New York, is producing and syndicating program titled News Spot, one-minute feature combining topical stories with contemporary music, interviews and comedy. Twenty-four segments are produced each week. PRN also produces and distributes News Blimp, three-minute series, and Sound Advice, two-minute show on audio equipment.

Automated jazz. "Balanced Spectrum Jazz," fully automated, 18-hour-per-week jazz radio program premiered Jan. 14 on WVIP-AM-FM Mount Kisco, N.Y. Produced by Jazz Media International Ltd., program is targeted to adults, 25 through 55, and blends elements from past 30 years of mainstream jazz. Robert A. Orenbach and Barney Lane, former general manager and program director who founded all-jazz format at WVRV-FM New York, created Jazz Media International, which consults and represents radio stations programming jazz full or part time in number of markets, including Boston; Chicago; Columbus; Minneapolis; Boise, Idaho; Orlando, Fla., and Cambridge, Mass.

Preview. Contemporary radio listeners are being exposed to this year's winter Olympics theme, Chuck Mangione's Give It All You Got (A&M). Considerable number of BROADCASTING Playlist's reporting stations added single last week, despite feelings by some programmers that radio should hold off on airplay until Olympics. Also added at many stations last week was Ray, Goodman & Brown's That Special Lady (Polydor): Scott Shannon, program director at WPGC-AM-FM Morningside, Md. (Washington), was first major-market contemporary programmer to add single.

Setting it straight. Bobby Christian, program director at WXXK(FM) Pittsburgh, was misquoted in "Playback" on Jan. 21, 1980. In referring to single, Desire (RSO) by Andy Gibb, he actually said: "We will not be a major station early on that record."

First five. These are the top five records in airplay on contemporary radio stations in the U.S., as reported by Playlist. (1) Rock With You by Michael Jackson on Epic. (2) Crazy Little Thing Called Love by Queen on Elektra. (3) Longer by Dan Fogelberg on Epic. (4) Yes I'm Ready by Teri Desario and H. W. Kasey on TK. (5) Do That To Me by Captain & Tennille on Casablanca.

are still four months away, but already IAM is pushing its members to voice their opposition to broadcasts in other ways. Most recently, the IAM newsletter urged all members to write NBC concerning its airing of the program, Power, a fictionalized account of the rise to power of Teamster boss Jimmy Hoffa.

Kalaski, in a letter to Fred Silverman, NBC president, said: "It has long been a complaint of mine that the television networks have largely ignored the American trade union movement both in their news coverage and in their entertainment broadcasting. But the direction of the focus that your network has placed on its recent coverage of unions is misinformed, misguided and vicious."

Kalaski added that the unions are ready for a "meaningful dialogue" with the television industry "to help realize the full potential of this crucial medium of our society." But, he warned, "if that fails, we also stand ready to responsibly act to insure that the medium is not abused and that American workers, consumers—indeed the large majority of American citizens—have parity on television with other elements of our society."

Kalaski's message to NBC has spread and has received support through similar letters sent by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, and the Bakery, Confectionery and Tobacco Workers International Union.

Fall back. Unable to get commercial stations it wanted in Dallas and Honolulu, Mobil Oil put its current Edward and Mrs. Simpson miniseries on noncommercial KERA-TV and KHET(TV) in those markets. But Mobil sources emphasize that stations neither carry Mobil's commercials nor are paid for taking series. Word from KERA is that Edward episodes are run without breaks, but with usual "made possible by" credit at end.

NCAA play-off action. Games that NBC-TV does not telecast during next month's National Collegiate Basketball Championship will be available live to other stations through NCAA Productions, Shawnee Mission, Kan. NBC-TV, which has held rights to the playoffs since 1969, will cover semifinals and final (March 22, 24), all four regional finals (March 15, 16) and selected second round games (March 8, 9). That will leave as many as 25 other games in the 48-team competitions that begins March 6. Contact: Dennis Cryder or Jim Shaffer, NCAA Productions, (913) 384-3220.

Pays to advertise. National advertising campaign begun last October by Public Broadcasting Service has proved effective. Preliminary findings from PBS study show programs advertised in TV Guide had average prime-time audience 29% greater than average for programs not included in campaign.

Love match. UA-Columbia Satellite Services Corp. has obtained exclusive rights to matches of Women's Tennis Association, providing for minimum of six tournaments per season for three years. Cost of rights was not disclosed. Coverage is expected to include Wells Fargo Classic, Volvo Classic and BMW tournament. UA-Columbia Satellite Network serves about five million homes in 47 states with its programming.

Milestone. Showtime Entertainment, nation's second-largest pay-cable service (after Home Box Office) has signed its millionth subscriber. Customer is from Pasadena (Tex.) Cablevision, receives free year of Showtime and 19-inch color TV.

Blair Radio and Q 107 are now helping advertisers score extra points in Washington, D.C.

Washington, D.C.'s market area is ranked eighth in the nation for retail sales.*

Teaming up to help national advertisers get a bigger share of that market are Blair Radio and WRQX-FM (or Q107, for short).

Q107 is the 50,000 watt ABC-Owned FM stereo station in the market. Its contemporary rock format is geared for the 12-49 demographic with a strong emphasis on 12-34.

On-air personalities, promotions, contests and prizes have combined to earn Q107 a top slot in Washington. And aggressive marketing is putting it farther ahead all the time.

But what good is it to be at the top of your league if advertisers don't know about it? That's why Q107 has named Blair Radio as its national sales rep.

Blair Radio has what it takes to help a station keep on winning. Sheer aggressiveness. And the skill and resources to back it up.

Blair and Q107. Together, we're making things happen in radio.

Reallocation of TV spectrum called key to more networks

FCC network study report says commission could aid new program services by shifting all stations to UHF or limiting V affiliations; use of cable and pay also pushed to provide diversity

While various methods of program delivery, such as cable, pay television and multipoint distribution hold promise for the advent of more television networks, and while video recorders and public broadcasting provide viewers with choices in programing, the FCC's refusal to "come to grips" with its basic spectrum allocation and assignment policies is a "severe" barrier to the development of more networks on the air.

This is the conclusion of a consultant to the FCC's network inquiry special staff, which last week released several preliminary reports on the prospects for additional networks.

The network inquiry staff has been mandated to conduct a full-scale examination of commercial program distribution practices in television broadcasting. It has been examining television network relations with affiliates, advertisers and program suppliers, in addition to distribution and factors influencing profitability of television stations.

Last October, the inquiry staff released the first of its reports on the network-affiliate relationship, FCC jurisdiction over networks and existing FCC networking rules (BROADCASTING, Oct. 22, 1979). This latest series deals with the prospect for additional networks.

One report, by Thomas Schuessler, professor of law, University of Arizona, relates the FCC's spectrum management policies to the number of television networks. The report concludes that two decisions limited the entrance of new networks in the top 100 markets.

Those decisions were the FCC's adoption of a "intermixed" UHF and VHF assignment plan, "which greatly reduced the number of technically comparable assignments made to each market," and the decision to base the plan on the principle of localism, "thereby greatly reducing the total number of assignments which could be made to each market."

The report offers what it considers "structural solutions." The first is a shift to an all-UHF system—which Professor Schuessler considers the "optimum solution." This shift, the report notes, equalizes technical assignments and would free the VHF allocation for other services. The shift, however, would not be without costs. Those costs, the report says, are the "obvious political problems resulting from imposing increased competition upon existing VHF license holders in intermixed markets, and there would be undoubtedly economic costs associated with converting VHF operations to UHF."

The costs could be minimized, the report says, by providing a sufficiently long transition time so that depreciated VHF equipment could be replaced with UHF equipment. Additionally, the report says that if Congress adopts a substantial spectrum use fee the cost of conversion could be eased by "simply permitting VHF licensees to credit their transition costs against their spectrum fees."

A significant effect of all-UHF allocation—that of withdrawing service from a large number of viewers not served by UHF because of propagation characteristics—could be remedied, the report says, by "employing greater transmission power, constructing taller antennas and utilizing booster and/or translator stations ..."

Another approach advanced to spur additional networks is a limitation on the number of VHF stations with which each network could affiliate so that "there would remain an equal number of VHF stations for affiliation with a fourth network." The report concluded, however, that this approach would not "adequately deal" with the problem because "the problem of technical comparability by simply spreading it around does not necessarily create a situation where new entry would be attracted in view of the large capital investment required." And more seriously, the report notes that "it fails to deal with the problem of nonoperating UHF stations in presently intermixed markets."

The report concludes that even if the UHF handicap is overcome by technological improvements and commission action, there would be limits on the numbers of stations to be accommodated in the top 100 markets.

By contrast, the report concludes, cable television offers a solution to both the technical and limitations problems. But until cable penetration levels are comparable to those presently achieved by the over-the-air networks, "cable remains only a potential solution to the present structural limitations on the development of additional networks."

Another report, prepared by L.A. Powe Jr., professor of law, University of Texas, entitled "FCC Determinations on Networking Issues in Multiple Ownership Proceedings," is just that. It is a detailed account of commission deliberations and decisions that have had an impact on station ownership and networking.

The report begins by describing the evolution of the current television ownership patterns of the three national networks. This is followed by a brief description of the current rules affecting station ownership and networking, and the status of the FCC's legal authority to promulgate such rules.

The conclusion is that since the Chain Broadcasting Report of 1941, the FCC's first look at the role of national networks, the FCC has debated the issue of networking and station ownership without coming to a serious or consistent conclusion. The report says: "While in the debates over networking and ownership no one has stated that a network would come into existence without owning a group of stations, it has been apparent that ownership of stations without more is probably not enough." The report added that while no one has said so, the debate "has assumed that ownership of stations is necessary but not sufficient."

The report concludes that the commission's practice for years has been to think of networks as a closed class of ABC, CBS and NBC, "rather than any specific types of vertically integrated units."

Powe urges the FCC to adopt a definition of network to show for the existence of more than the three entities and says that the FCC should speak with "confidence" in "planning for a future where more networks will or will not be possible."

A third report issued last week focuses on the prospects for additional networks employing different methods of program delivery or financing, including subscription television, multipoint distribution service and cable television.

According to the FCC, these three

Drop-ins pop up.

FCC Chairman Charles Ferris took the issue of additional TV networks to Los Angeles last week in a speech to the Media Forum, a black media organization (see also page 106). Ferris, speaking about outlets for "the creative talents of minorities" and others who have been on the fringe of commercial television, said UHF-TV improvement can "also improve public television's status as a fourth network." He added, "We can also create new UHF and VHF stations by shoehorning in additional stations at less than the present mileage separation requirements and by making greater use of translators and other low-power television operations."

RUN WITH BRUCE JENNER BEFORE THE OLYMPICS!

Run "Olympic Champions" hosted and narrated by Bruce Jenner. Stations in all of the top 20 markets are already committed to making the most of Olympic interest before the games begin!

Here's the run-down: The DFS Program Exchange has developed 60 one-minute profiles of astonishing Olympic performances. Each profile includes Olympic history followed by a 10-second I.D. (available for your station's local sale).

Starting on the 20th of May, these programs will run on the 60 days preceding the Summer Olympics, with each program available for 3 runs per day.

Offered on an exclusive market basis with no cash outlay, this series has already been purchased in 60% of the U.S. including these major markets: WNEW-New York, KTTV—Los Angeles, WGN-Chicago, WPHL-Philadelphia, KXAS-Dallas, WTCN-Minneapolis/St. Paul, WFLA-Tampa/St. Petersburg, WTTG-Washington, D.C., KING-Seattle.

delivery systems were chosen for study because they have been carrying increasing amounts of programming in direct competition with the broadcasting networks. In each case, the report says, commission policies could help or hinder the ability to become fully competitive with existing networks.

The report offers few predictions, however, about the future. With MDS, for example, it notes that the service "is a sufficiently new and undeveloped industry that its future growth and direction can only be guessed at." The report provides a history and current status of commission regulations of MDS, the equipment used, stations on the air and available studies examining the prospects for MDS.

The report concludes that MDS is "a service with many potential uses, of which pay TV is but one."

But it says that although MDS may continue to supply outlying areas of a cable system, "once an area has been cabled, virtually no one expects MDS to ultimately prevail as a pay delivery system. The competition between MDS delivered pay service and pay STV may, in the short term, be much closer, depending from market to market on coverage area, and, in many instances, who gets there first."

At present, the report adds, among pay TV subscribers, MDS has approximately a 4.1% share, with approximately 5.4% for STV and more than 90% for cable. The report estimates that MDS has almost a quarter of a million pay subscribers.

Subscription TV, meanwhile, which began a trial experiment in the early 1960's, now has eight operating stations. And as with MDS, predictions are difficult to make. "How the industry, or the majority of the industry, actually will develop is, of course, not yet knowable," the report says. "The kinds and degree of vertical integration, as well as crossownership, may well determine the likelihood of new networks forming or being joined."

What will be important, the report notes, is the effect of FCC regulation on STV and on its competition. This is especially true now, it says, because of the speed with which STV can enter a market. "Whether STV is ultimately proved to be no more than a stalking horse or market softener for cable, or whether quick penetration will delay or defer cable, the log jam of applications at the commission, and the length of time required for obtaining approval certainly affects both STV's short- and long-term prospects," it says.

But an analysis of the situation is difficult. "The limited experience to date is intriguing but hardly dispositive. The hoped-for penetration rate of 10% has not been achieved, but at least one operator, ON TV in Los Angeles, is well on its way."

The cable report describes the history and structure of the cable industry and examines the extent to which multiple system owners have acquired cable franchises. In addition, there is an examination of the pay services offered to cable subscribers and the extent to which pay TV programmers have acquired ownership interests in cable systems.

Washington Watch

Fighting the FEC. National Association of Broadcasters and Radio-Television News Directors Association have asked Senate to veto sections of Federal Election Commission's newest version of proposed rules dealing with sponsorship of debates by newspapers and broadcasters. NAB and RTNDA, in letter to Senator Claiborne Pell, (D-R.I.), chairman of Senate Rules Committee, say that although proposals are superior to first version, which Senate vetoed in September, they exceed FEC's jurisdiction regarding news organizations, and "raise substantial First Amendment questions." Letter makes clear NAB and RTNDA do not object to portions of proposed regulations designed to remove doubt as to legality of corporate and union contributions to help defray costs to nonprofit organizations, like League of Women Voters, in presenting political debates. Thus far, NAB-RTNDA letter and one from league supporting proposals are only comments Congress has received on FEC proposals, which were submitted to Congress on Dec. 20.

No they don't. National Association of Broadcasters contends that National Telecommunications and Information Administration lacks authority to reimburse participants in its proceedings. NTIA issued notice of proposed rulemaking last December looking toward program of reimbursements to public participants in NTIA rulemakings. NAB comments said NTIA "assumes it has the legal authority... Indeed, the notice does not even invite public comment on this basic issue." NTIA's position, said NAB, "cannot be legally sustained in the face of judicial determinations rejecting the 'implied authority' theory holding that only Congress can authorize agency expenditures of public funds."

Quicker, please. National Radio Broadcasters Association has told FCC that it should limit time to which commission must respond to petitions for rulemaking to 180 days (there currently is no limit). NRBA comments were filed in support of National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting's petition for rulemaking asking for 180-day limit to avoid delay in simple rulemaking petitions such as FM channel assignment requests. NRBA acknowledged that "it may be appropriate in some exceptional cases for the commission to take additional time" but the FCC should emphasize that such exceptional cases must be explained.

Not too happy. Four television stations from Representative Ronald Mottl's (D-Ohio) district have registered opposition to Mottl's bill, H.R. 5430, that would require public disclosure of station financial data. Stations argue that confidentiality of data is crucial for success in business, and bill offers no benefit to public interest. View is also that of Ohio Association of Broadcasters. Hearings on bill, scheduled for Jan. 29, have been postponed indefinitely.

New post. Former Watergate Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox has replaced Nan Waterman as chairman of Common Cause. Cox has been member of Common Cause board since 1976 and has chaired board's Litigation Committee. He continues as professor at Harvard University.

The study also looks at key developments in the cable industry, including: (1) the competitive advantages large MSO's may have in acquiring new franchises and the barriers to entry raised against new firms; (2) competition among program producers, packagers and distributors and cable system operators and the extent to which they will have access to cable audiences; (3) superstations and copyright liability, program liability, advertising rates, satellite resale, common carrier authorizations and tariffs, and (4) state/local regulation and cable competition with the commercial networks; state/local authority to regulate pay cable, and federal pre-emption of areas states have traditionally regulated.

The final two reports deal with program distribution, scheduling and production in the public television system and the status of home videocassette recorders and videodisk systems.

Discussing public television, that report begins: "At its inception public television, unlike commercial television, lacked the capacity for simultaneous networking, had no reliable source of income to be used for national program production, no common economic purpose and no centralized structure." Because of the lack of centralization or money for national productions, most production efforts were "crude" and "unable to attract large audiences."

As public television began to expand, increased spending came through funds provided by the Ford Foundation and others. When a Carnegie Commission report articulated a role for public broadcasting in 1967, the Public Broadcasting Act was adopted, establishing the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. However, the act did not provide the amounts of money recommended by the Carnegie Commission as necessary for the full development of a national system. (The Public Broadcasting Service was formed to run the interconnection between CPB and outside funding.)

A partnership agreement between CPB and PBS was eventually worked out, where PBS was reorganized into "an organization completely controlled by the noncommercial licensees and, except for the funding of the interconnection, became self-supporting through membership dues."

However, as systems and audiences grew, decisions concerning new programs were "largely in the hands of a multiplicity of outside funders." In 1975, when public broadcasting began to plan and implement satellite interconnection for public television, making simultaneous distribution of a number of programs available, light was seen at the end of the tunnel.

The report concludes that "many feel that the 'tyranny of the long-line' will make it possible for the stations to aggregate program production funds in one or more central programing agencies responsible to the stations. Multiple program services may create a complex distribution and programing mechanism controlled from a number of different points—PBS, regional networks, CPB, consortia of independent producers and stations and the like—with each point in the system having sufficient funds for the programing, with funding and acquisitions decisions made according to the needs of the users and producers not outside funders."

With the advent of satellite distribution and more funds, the report adds, it will become more likely that CPB and PBS will be given the "extra measure of power they need to be able to act efficiently and, it is hoped, responsibly, as the central determinators of the system's national presence."

Home video equipment—as opposed to new additional networks for program distribution—provides the viewer with a choice for other programing to his liking, allowing him to be, the report says, "free of real-time television broadcast scheduling and [becoming] the program director."

Thus far the report concludes, the courts have authorized private, in-home recording and copying of copyrighted broadcast audiovisual works. The report states, however, that the court decision allowing such use of video equipment, "reserves for another day questions raised by tape duplication, tape swapping, or copying from media such as cable television or pay television."

Minority message

New technologies will be the key to programing to small and diverse audiences, Ferris tells black media audience

Solutions to minority stereotyping in television programing "must be based on a full awareness of the cold economic realities of the media business," FCC Chairman Charles D. Ferris told the Media Forum, a black media organization, in Los Angeles last Monday. Ferris said that alternative networks and expansion of the television distribution chain hold the key to minority programing and program diversity.

Ferris documented the "black experience" in films and early radio and Stung. Representative John Murphy (D-N.Y.), a member of the House Communications Subcommittee, was named in the FBI "sting" operation that implicated eight members of Congress on bribery charges (see page 88). Sources report that Murphy met last year with a Philadelphia lawyer and FBI undercover agents for talks on how to get two "clients" of the agents into the country. After the conversation, a briefcase containing $50,000 was offered to Murphy, but he reportedly said his attorney would take it. Murphy issued a statement last week denying the charges. He said he had been approached "by some persons on behalf of Middle East interests" but "a routine background check disclosed to me that these persons were fraudulent." He added that the events in question took place within recent weeks and he had cut off further talks with the men several weeks ago.

In a separate incident, the FBI disclosed last week that it was investigating actions of Senator Howard Cannon (D-Nev.), chairman of the Commerce Committee, the parent committee of the Communications Subcommittee. The FBI suspects that Cannon may have been rewarded with land in Nevada by an organized crime figure in return for his action on a trucking deregulation bill. Cannon issued a statement denying any wrongdoing.

television programing, citing characters in the 1915 silent film "Birth of a Nation," "Gone With the Wind" and Amos 'n' Andy. He said in the last decade "we have seen the networks' fitful efforts to reflect the changing roles of blacks and minorities [Roots and The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman]. One result has been more roles for blacks and other minorities, although still few meaningful ones."

In response to current television programing, Ferris said, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights and other groups have urged the FCC to play an "active role in helping to remove demeaning characterizations of minorities and women from the air."

Admitting that this is an important task, Ferris said "how we do it is as important as setting about the task . . . that full and just share can be obtained without sacrificing those basic principles that are more important to each citizen, especially minorities—the freedom from government censorship."

Ferris told the group it was not alone in its dissatisfaction with the network programing. "A recent survey done for PBS found that less than a third of all television viewers were satisfied with the diversity of commercial television programing," he said.

Ferris believes the "metamorphosis" of radio provides a lesson for television in this regard. "The [radio] industry's attitudes towards blacks, Latinos, and other minorities did not emerge until competition forced radio stations to seek a smaller share of the market on a more localized basis," he said.

He concluded that "to this end, perhaps the FCC's greatest contribution can be made by removing the barriers to the expansion of the electronic distribution chain and to the creation of new television networks, whether by cable, by satellite or by pay TV."

Ferris added that "increasing the number of television pathways to the home lowers the expected percentage—the normal share—of the viewing market critical to be considered a success in the industry. As the experience of radio has demonstrated, if this share threshold is lowered enough, the specialized tastes of many unsatisfied and underserved groups—all minorities in a true sense—will become sufficiently important that there is an attractive incentive to attract producers to respond directly to them."

The FCC chairman ended his speech with a warning to Hollywood—"you in Hollywood can be timid, and protectionist, and find your industry 10 years from now increasingly irrelevant and still plagued by massive underemployment. Or you can be open to new concepts, pursuing new electronic media ventures with the boldness of the early studio heads. I wish you in the program production community wisdom in your choice."

Metromedia wants deregulation for some satellite distributors

It asks FCC to exempt from common carrier status companies that offer superstation programing, leaving them exposed to copyright

Metromedia Inc. has told the FCC that it should not subject distributors of superstation programing to common carrier regulation. But it was not that Metromedia is attempting to protect such systems. For if they are not common carriers, Metromedia said, they would be subject to copyright payment.

Metromedia, which has long been concerned about the activities of satellite-based systems that pick up programs from television stations and distribute them to cable systems around the country, expressed its views in a proceeding examining the FCC's regulation of competitive common carriers. One question involved is whether the commission may "forbear" from regulating such carriers.

Metromedia said the commission is barred by law from "completely" abandoning the regulation of "actual carriers." But, it added, the agency is now regulating some entities, "such as Southern Satellite Systems," which distributes the programing of Ted Turner's superstation WTBS(TV) Atlanta, "which are not, in fact, common carriers." And those systems, Metromedia said, "can and should be totally deregulated."

Metromedia said the "prerequisite" to common carrier status is that customers transmit material of their own choosing.

And "superstation distributors," like Southern Satellite Systems, ASN Inc., United Video Inc. and others, "contract for satellite transmission capacity and then use that capacity to distribute program material which they select." Their customers, Metromedia said, do not pick the programming.

Thus, Metromedia said, the FCC is legally bound to remove the "mantle 'common carrier'" from the superstation distributors. That action would "materially advance the commission's deregulation objective." Metromedia said, adding, "Superstation distributors... would be free to pursue their activities in the marketplace without the burden of commission regulation." But at the same time, Metromedia said, those distributors would be left outside the copyright liability exemption that applies to common carriers.

"This undoubtedly will cause some disruption of their activities until they can adjust to marketplace activities," Metromedia said. "However, it is clear that the superstation distributors have been unintended beneficiaries of the exemption [in the law]."

Family viewing still on its way back to the FCC

Appeals court rejects plaintiffs' request for reconsideration

Hollywood producers, writers and actors have suffered another setback in the family viewing suit they filed against the networks, the National Association of Broadcasters and the FCC. The U.S. Court of Appeals in San Francisco has denied their petition for rehearing by the full 12-member court of a three-judge panel's decision in the case.

The panel in November vacated the decision of U.S. District Judge Warren J. Ferguson in November 1976 that agreed with the plaintiffs' complaint. The Hollywood group alleged that the commission had violated the First Amendment and the Administrative Procedure Act and that the networks and the NAB violated the First Amendment by conspiring with the FCC to adopt the family viewing concept and enforce it against licensees. Under the concept, broadcasters were to limit the first two hours of prime time to viewing suitable for the entire family.

The appeals court, in vacating Ferguson's decision, ordered the case sent back for consideration by the commission (BROADCASTING, Nov. 19, 1979). And none of the circuit's 12 judges appeared to find fault with that decision: None requested a vote on the suggestion for rehearing by the full court.

Tandem Productions Inc., the East and West chapters of the Writers Guild of America, the Directors Guild of America, and the Screen Actors Guild still have the option of seeking Supreme Court review of the case. Their attorneys last week said no decision had yet been made on what the next step in the litigation would be.

Technology

SMPTE: full speed ahead on digital

Engineers set up working group that is to develop standards; Toronto conference is success in devoting itself to one topic

Two days before the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers 14th annual television conference officially began in Toronto on Feb. 1, the biggest news had already been made.

The SMPTE working group on digital video standards, responding to initiatives by its European members, formed a new task force "to investigate the possibility of establishing a worldwide component digital television standard."

Although the scope of the task force is confined to investigation and recommendation, the implications of its formation are far-sighted and far-reaching. The action was premised on the belief that the days of analog are numbered (although no one expects total digitization before five to 10 years) and that the switch from analog to digital will afford the industry a chance to hack its way out of the PAL-SECAM-NTSC standards jungle and into the wide open spaces of a universal digital television format.

The key to developing a universal standard is the component encoding of the video signal. Encoding the composite signal of a NTSC camera, for example, creates a digital signal unlike a digitized PAL or SECAM signal and incompatible with non-NTSC equipment. The idea of component encoding is to digitize the signal before the peculiarities of each of the different systems come into play. As Rolland Zavada, vice president of engineering for SMPTE, put it: "When you split the signal into components, you begin to bridge the gap."

When the organizers of the conference held their first planning session, they realized that it would take a hot subject to attract television engineers to Toronto in the dead of winter. They found it in digital video technology.

Two days of technical sessions were devoted to the subject. The exhibit floor was restricted to companies willing to show only products relating to the all-digital theme.

By the time that the final count was taken, SMPTE had surprised itself. Over 1,000 people registered for the conference, a record for the annual event and a good 200 more than it had expected based on the number of pre-registrants.

Conference Chairman Maurice French said that when the meeting was planned, he had to convince others that the digital subject could carry a whole conference, but as conference time approached, it became increasingly obvious that SMPTE was "hitting it just right," and by the time the registrants booked their rooms at the Sheraton-Centre on Jan. 31, digital had become the "hottest topic" in television engineering.

At a press briefing before the conference, Joseph Flaherty, vice president of engineering at CBS and financial vice president of the SMPTE, said that the SMPTE's television conference was "the most important technical conference in North America" and added that this year's meeting put SMPTE on the "cutting edge of digital technology."

By the conference's end, nobody could refute Flaherty's claims. The technical sessions, covering all manner of digital video issues from teletext to fiber optics, were well attended. On occasion the movie theater where the papers were delivered filled to standing room only, and the overflow was guided to another theater next door where it witnessed the speeches on closed-circuit, large-screen television.

The working group on digital technology standards that spun off the task force will go forward with its work toward establishing a composite digital television standard for NTSC countries. According to Robert Hopkins of RCA, who heads the working group, the group is in the third phase of work on the composite standard. He said that a draft has already been written and that only the field tests remain to be performed and evaluated. "The draft is complete," he said, "except for the changes that might be necessary after tests are completed."

Whether a composite digital signal will come to pass now that focus has shifted to a possible component standard depends, Zavada said, on whether a composite standard "is still timely" after it has been finalized.

The task force met on the last day of the conference and elected Frank Davidoff, a CBS engineer and old SMPTE hand, to the chairmanship. Davidoff said "that one of the important considerations that we will have to try to resolve" is that of expanding the television signal bandwidth

Blair Radio and Greenville's WESC-AM and FM now are helping advertisers make a great double play.

Greenville is the largest SMSA in South Carolina and one of the ten fastest growing markets in the United States*.

WESC-AM/FM is the most powerful radio combination in South Carolina and delivers one of the largest audiences in the entire Southeast. Ranked consistently among the top 30 country stations in the entire country, they are the undisputed leaders among all country stations in South Carolina and Georgia.

But even impressive credentials like these – plus the fact that WESC was voted South Carolina's 1978 Station of the Year – don't mean a thing if advertisers don't catch the story. That's why WESC-AM/FM signed Blair Radio as its national sales rep.

Blair Radio has what it takes to go to bat for a station and help it keep on winning. Sheer aggressiveness. And the skill and resources to back it up.

Blair and WESC-AM/FM. Together, we're making things happen in radio.

beyond its present 4.2 mhz bounds. He said that as broadcasters move from analog to digital, they are going to have to ask themselves whether they want to maintain the same quality or "aim at hi-fi quality."

The bandwidth question threatens to become highly political. Broadcasters, in an effort to keep down costs, may want to limit expansion of the bandwidth, and production companies and industrial video users will seek to broaden the bandwidth as far as it will go. The production houses need the extra bandwidth to facilitate creation of special effects, and the industrial users, unencumbered by the limiting effect of having to broadcast to receivers that will produce the same picture regardless of how much the signal from the studio is improved, would like more bandwidth to meet the high-quality picture needs of industry and medicine.

In his Friday afternoon paper, John Lowry, president of Digital Video Systems, said that most of the customers for his company's video processing equipment are not broadcasters and added that "as we enter the 1980's we are presented with a rare opportunity for defining a significantly improved system." He argued that in defining that system as much "quality headroom" should be built in as possible. He suggested that with "the industrial market growing rapidly" the quality of the video signal should not be shaped around the needs of broadcasters.

Another of the SMPTE digital committees also made news at the conference. William Connolly, another CBS engineer and head of the study group on digital recording, announced that his group would be sending out 1,100 questionnaires in an attempt to learn exactly what qualities video engineers are looking for in digital recorders.

The inevitability of the digitizing of video was—at least by the end of the conference—an accepted fact of life. Davidoff, in the second technical paper of the conference, described the route video would take as it moved from analog to digital. He said the first and current phase, has been characterized by the introduction into the studio of digital "black boxes" capable of performing functions that analog devices couldn't. The second phase will be marked by digital devices replacing analog devices, and the third phase will follow the introduction of the digital videotape recorder and feature the digital editing suite—"an island of digital in a sea of analog." The last phase, he said, is a complete takeover by digital—the all-digital studio.

Davidoff said the impetus for the transformation will come with the development of the digital videotape recorder. "The videotape recorder has become the center of the broadcaster's universe," he said.

According to an SMPTE spokesman, the number of exhibitors—16 in 30 booths—was slightly below the number of last year's conference, but, he added, "we turned down a lot that didn't meet the requirement of having a product that relates to the program."

The exhibitors who were there did not include all the digital equipment manufacturers, but they did represent a cross-section of current digital equipment and services.

Digital Video Systems showed a number of different digital devices including its DPS-1 time base corrector. RCA demonstrated its TK-47 automatic camera system. Micro Consultants Inc. was demonstrating its DPE-5000 digital special effects device, which is now capable of handling five separate video signals (MCI's Dave Dever said that ABC will be using one of the five-input models at the winter Olympics.)

The New York Institute of Technology Computer Graphics Laboratory was offering computer graphics services. According to a spokesman, the Graphics Arts System has been used to produce 25 commercials as well as titles and logos.

Among the few pieces of new equipment at the show was the NEC FS-16 frame synchronizer and processing amplifier. According to Richard Deinert, the device will be ready for delivery shortly after the National Association of Broadcasters convention in mid-April. Deinert said its size is one of its best features; it is only 2.6 inches high, 22 inches deep and can fit into a standard rack.

TeleMation's Compositor I titling system was also set up for full demonstration. Dave Spindle, who manned the controls, said that the titling computer now stores 120 lettering fonts and 10 additional "utility fonts."

Teletext takes the spotlight

System displays and technical papers on the future of this information distribution service are hot topic at SMPTE meeting

One of the applications of digital technology that has drawn a good deal of attention over the last year is teletext, a means of broadcasting pages of textual information in the vertical blanking interval of regular programming to television receivers equipped with special decoders.

This increasing interest permeated the annual television conference of the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers in Toronto. Five papers, consuming the bulk of one of the four half-day sessions, were devoted to the subject and on the exhibit floor, restricted by SMPTE to just 16 vendors, representatives of French and Canadian teletext systems and their wares took up more space than most.

The technical papers produced a snapshot of the current state of the technology and one—by Walter Ciciora of Zenith Radio Corp.—went well beyond the discussion of the technical aspects to the question of whether teletext can be a viable consumer product.

Robert O'Connor, a CBS engineer who doubles as head of the Electronic Industries Association subcommittee on teletext, presented an update on the subcommittee's work and predicted that the work would lead to a petition for rulemaking at the FCC in mid-April, proposing national teletext standards.

According to O'Connor, the field tests being conducted by CBS at the network's KMOX-TV St. Louis for the subcommittee have been completed and additional, similar tests are planned for the network's Los Angeles station, KNXT. O'Connor said that the teletext signal held up well in the "rolling countryside" around St. Louis and the object of the Los Angeles tests is to determine whether the teletext signal can survive the "rugged terrain" there. (According to a spokesman for CBS, tests begun in mid-December involving teletext signals sent out over the network loop are continuing.)

The CBS tests are being conducted with slightly modified versions of the British Ceefax/Oracle system and the French Antiope system. Both of these systems as well as the Canadian Telidon system were compared in a paper written by several members of the Canadian Department of Communications Research and presented by J.R. Storey. The case for another system being talked about these days was presented by David Silliman of the Public Broadcasting Service. He described the closed captioning system—a limited form of teletext—that was developed by PBS, ABC-TV and NBC-TV and that will be implemented on March 15 by the National Captioning Institute.

Despite the discussions of teletext in terms of data bit rates and graphic resolution, it was generally agreed that the technical questions concerning teletext are well on their way to being answered. It was Walter Ciciora's paper that raised the crucial question of whether teletext as a service will be accepted in the United States.

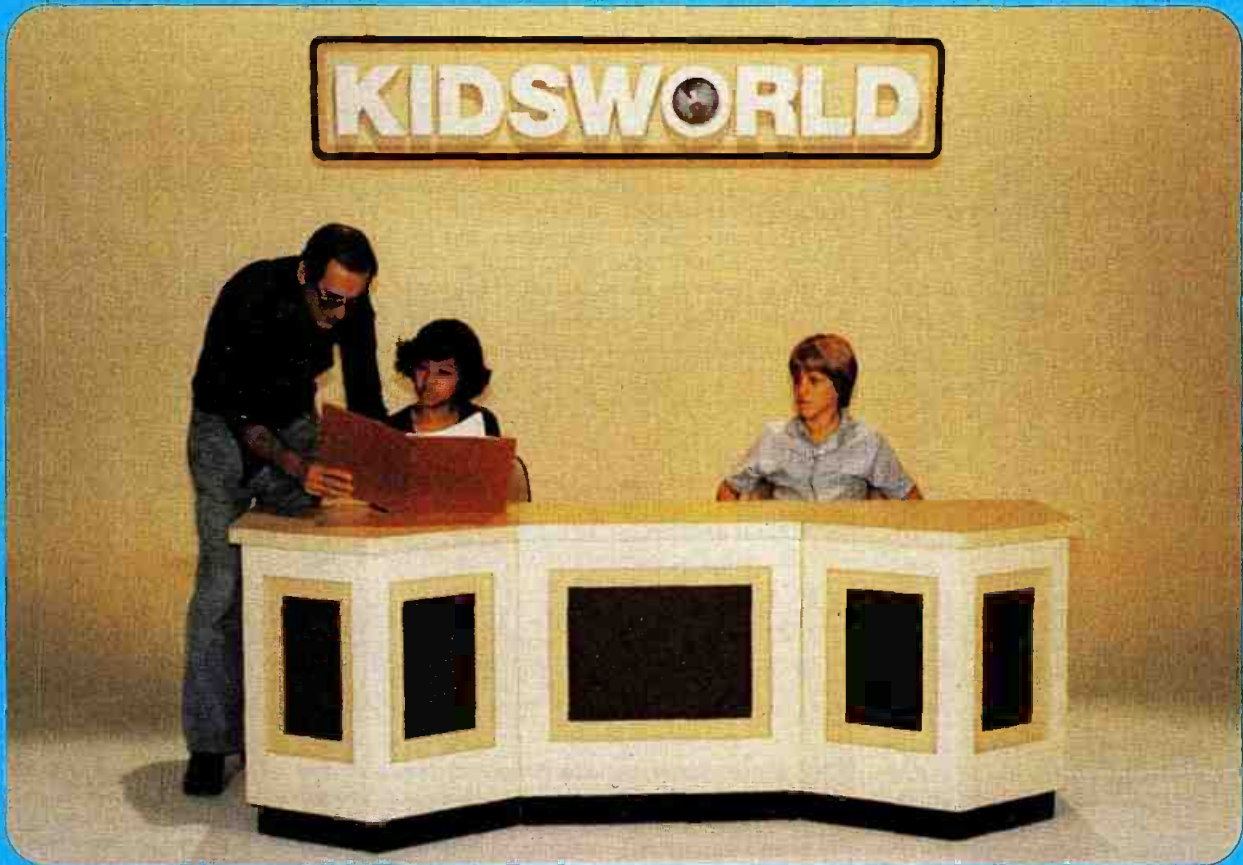

"There is a paucity of analysis of the user's view of teletext systems," Ciciora said. And, he added, "This is unfortunate since design tradeoffs should be guided by consumer considerations."

Because of the broadband capability of cable, the transmission of textual matter to the television set is felt by some to be a job for cable. But Ciciora refused to go along with this view. He said that in cable "too many entrepreneurial spirits will spring forth and the cable market will be fragmented. Most if not all fragments will be too small to enjoy the economies of scale. Technical compromises will have to be made to keep costs low, and very limited and unexciting services will result." On the other hand, he said, teletext can become an "important and growing part of American television."

Ciciora urged that proponents of teletext "consider carefully" the nature of consumers. "Failure to accommodate the consumer will likely result in disaster."

"To most people," Ciciora said, "television implies entertainment. Probably no one has yet purchased a television receiver with the specific goal of obtaining information or being educated . . . The prospective purchaser walks on to the sales floor with entertainment in mind. Features which appeal to this criteria will claim attention."

One of the features he felt could attract the attention of a portion of the consumer market is closed captioning. He said that the National Captioning Institute's growth will "be carefully watched" and should another more comprehensive teletext service come into being, "it will share that growth." He said that two captioning services will not be mutually exclusive and predicted that "captioning will be broadcast in [two] forms simultaneously."

Ciciora said teletext should have a special appeal to the sports fan who could use the service to check on the progress of other games and lists of statistics, the delight of sports spectators.

Other services that Ciciora felt teletext could provide are public service messages, television listings, travel schedules, election night statistics and traffic and weather information.

He suggested use of teletext as an educational tool. He said that a one-hour videodisk or videotape can store more than one-and-a-half million pages of teletext. "By digitally numbering each frame and controlling frame access under software control, a patient teaching mechanism can be provided."

Once the teletext system and service are ready for market, Ciciora cited two areas that would determine ultimate success: cost of entry and the time and effort needed to use it. The cost of entry problem can be solved in part by starting the service with "the lowest-form-of-life" decoder. He warned, however, that such a decoder should be replaceable later with more sophisticated models.

Another problem related to the time and effort admonition is access time or the time it takes for a page to appear after it has been requested: "Americans are typically impatient. The waiting time is a critical factor." He said this problem can be solved by utilizing more vertical blanking interval lines and by repeating high-demand pages more often in the teletext transmission cycle.

Another method of reducing the access time is with a multi-page memory. Such a memory would permit the user to store a number of pages in the decoder and thus have them available for immediate call-up. The user would no longer be at the mercy of the transmission cycle that sends just one page at a time.

Understanding the value of multi-page storage, Antiope Videotex Systems, the U.S. marketing entity for the French Antiope system, demonstrated a 72-page memory at its exhibit. The memory did exactly what it was designed to do, but was far from being a practical element in any teletext system. The memory, built by the Compagnie Continentale de Signalisation, was the size of a small black and white television set and costs, according to one of the exhibit's staffers, $10,000.

Pierre Gaujard, president of AVS, admitted that the memory in its present state was impractical, but not the concept. Gaujard said within two or three years a multi-page memory would be reality. How many pages it would have to store to make the system practical is a question that Gaujard said could be answered only by market study.

The Antiope people were also demonstrating a hard copy printer, another item they hoped would enhance their system. The $2,000 device creates a negative image of what appears on the television screen through a process called thermal printing—the image is electrically burned into the five-inch-wide, aluminum-coated paper.

Across the center aisle from the Antiope display was the Telidon exhibit. Telidon, developed by the Canadian Department of Communications and the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, was demonstrated in two different modes—teletext and viewdata (hard wire).

The teletext signal was being transmitted by OECA's CICA-TV Toronto (ch. 19). According to Tom Horne, an OECA spokesman, the station was sending out 35 pages of text to 55 decoder-equipped receivers on lines 15 and 16 of the vertical blanking interval, as part of an initial trial test.

The viewdata version show was an interactive service linked by a half-duplex telephone line to a computer in Ottawa that stores thousands of pages of text. The telephone line permits the user to select any page in the computer's memory as well as providing the channel for sending the selected page to the user's television set.

The system was identical to the one Bell Canada will begin testing this October. According to Horne, Bell plans to have 50,000 pages of information stored in the computer and 1,000 decoders with telephone interfaces in place.

Ma Bell's medicine. It looks as though AT&T will be supplying remedy for ills of RCA Americom that resulted from loss of Satcom III last December (BROADCASTING, Dec. 17, 1979). Harold Rice, RCA's vice president of video-audio sales, in Mailgram to one of 13 customers who were to be accommodated by Satcom III, said that RCA has received affirmative response from AT&T on its request for 11 transponders on Comstar satellite system, which telephone company leases and operates. Mailgram quoted portion of AT&T's letter to RCA: AT&T is willing to make "available protection satellite transponder capacity on a temporary, interim basis subject to a final assessment of their availability when you respond." RCA said that it will respond to AT&T's offer by Feb. 15 after number of details—money is presumably one of them—are hammered out.

Videotext extravaganza. Possibly most comprehensive look at teletext and viewdata technologies was taken at Contemporary hotel in Orlando, Fla., last week. For benefit of chief executive officers of its 30 top-member MSO's, and its board of directors as well as its own top staff, National Cable Television Association sponsored three-day conference to study technical, marketing and regulatory issues arising out of blossoming of what it generically terms videotex. List of speakers, whom NCTA gathered from around world, included many top names in business. Although attendance at conference was by invitation only, Chris Weaver, NCTA's vice president of science and technology, said fruits of conference would be distilled into book for public dissemination.

Slide show sideshow. According to Dave Dever, salesman with Micro Consultants Inc. at SMPTE television conference, MCI will have prototype of new digital library system ready by National Association of Broadcasters convention in mid-April. DLS 6000, Dever said, could hold as many as 7,000 slides and will have feature permitting repositioning of slide on roster.

Smaller and smaller. Scientific-Atlanta, leading earth station manufacturer, has introduced three-meter satellite antenna (model 8006) for use in transmission of data, audio and video. Dish sits on single axis mount and can be pointed with single adjustment to any two satellites in 90-degree to 136-degree orbital arc, according to S-A. Atlanta firm also said dish can be made to look farther east by single strut change.

Getting SMARTS. RCA has awarded Microdyne Corp., Rockville, Md., contract to supply it with necessary satellite electronics to begin long-delayed implementation of its Selective Multiple Address Radio and Television Service (SMARTS), which it is testing with cooperation of Post-Newsweek Stations. Earth station antennas will come from another source, Antennas for Communications.

Added attraction. Beginning this week BROADCASTING will publish latest satellite earth station totals (updated monthly) in the satellite section of "For The Record" (page 130). As of Dec. 31, 1979, there were a total of 3,893 satellite earth stations. Transmit-receive earth stations totaled 340, with 140 pending applications and 200 operational. Receive-only earth stations totaled 3,553 with 1,293 pending applications and 2,260 operational.

Newhouse widens its base in cable

Purchase of Daniels Properties gives it leverage of running operating franchises, will bring tax certificate into play; parent firm buys Random from RCA

Newhouse Broadcasting, on its way out of the television business, shot up in the rankings of cable MSO's with its purchase of Daniels Properties Inc. for an unannounced price believed to be in the neighborhood of $90 to $100 million.

Newhouse will, upon closing, turn over control of the 15 systems in the Daniels package to MetroVision Inc., a company formed last spring by four former Cox Cable executives with $25 million in start-up money from Newhouse (BROADCASTING, April 9, 1979).

The addition of Daniels's 116,000 subscribers to those of Newhouse's NewChannels Corp. gives Newhouse-MetroVision a total of over 300,000 subscribers and puts it on the threshold of breaking onto the list of the top 10 MSO's. The price puts the deal among the top five in cable history.

Daniels, like Newhouse, is a privately owned company, one of several operating arms of Daniels & Associates. The parent firm will retain systems serving 80,000 subscribers through other cable entities and, according to President John Saeman, will use the proceeds of the sale to foster the growth of several unbuilt systems. Daniels & Associates also is one of the leading brokerage and investment banking firms in the industry.

The deal is directly linked to the proposed sale of Newhouse's five television stations to Times Mirror Inc. for $82.4 million (BROADCASTING, Dec. 11, 1978).

Newhouse is entitled to a tax certificate in the sale of the stations since it is selling the TV's to further an FCC policy—the break-up of newspaper-television crossownership situations. Newhouse's parent corporation owns newspapers in each of the cities in which it owns television. The tax certificate will allow Newhouse to defer the capital gains tax on the sale of the stations on the condition it reinvest the proceeds of the sale in some type of communications company or property within 18 months.

Newhouse's reinvestment will be the 15 systems of Daniels Properties.

Prospects for the FCC approval of the transfer application and, by extension, the tax certificate are presently looking good. The FCC staff lawyer working on the application said that he has "already written a preliminary draft" and that he expects action on the application some time in March. He added that two petitions to deny, filed by public interest groups, have been withdrawn.

(It's been an acquisitive time for the company. Newhouse Publications, the parent, announced last week that it had reached an agreement in principle with RCA to purchase its Random House publishing subsidiary for a price in the $65 million-$70 million range.)

It is not quite clear why Newhouse, which owns in addition to its broadcast properties NewChannels, a major MSO with 185,000 subscribers, chose to operate the Daniels systems through MetroVision instead of through NewChannels. (MetroVision is owned by five stockholders: Newhouse, which owns over half the stock; Henry Harris, president; Thurber M. Foreman; Richard C. Hickman and Craig Magher. What percentage of the stock each holds is a closely guarded secret.)

One reason advanced by both Harris and Robert Miron, vice president of Newhouse, is to form a stronger foundation for MetroVision's franchising efforts. According to Harris, when MetroVision applies for a franchise the city councils acknowledge that the company has the necessary money and experience, but they are sometimes put off by the fact that MetroVision doesn't yet have a functioning cable system. (It does hold franchises for suburbs of Chicago, Detroit, New Orleans and Cincinnati.)

Harris also added that the prospect of operating such a company allows MetroVision to hire more engineers and "more people to help with the franchising." He said the company's staff is approaching 30 and that he has "more hiring to do."

Saeman said there was a number of reasons why his company decided to spin

Sign of the times. TV Guide will introduce its first Cable/Pay-TV edition in the New Mexico-El Paso, Tex., area in what is said unofficially to be an experiment that could lead to similar spin-off editions in many other markets. "We're going to see how it does," one TV Guide source said, "and then take it from there."

Current Albuquerque, N.M., and El Paso editions of TV Guide are being replaced by a New Mexico edition and the New Mexico Cable/Pay edition, effective with the Feb. 23 issue. They will be sold side by side—at the same 40-cent newsstand prices—and the same advertising will appear in both, at no change in current TV Guide advertising rates.

The Cable/Pay edition will cover the area from Durango, Colo., to El Paso, where there are an estimated 181,200 cable subscribers among almost 600,000 TV homes. The regular New Mexico TV Guide will carry programming for 18 off-air signals while the Cable/Pay edition will list programming from 33 different sources including Showtime, two feeds of Home Box Office, Madison Square Garden, Calliope, Entertainment and Sports Network, Nickelodeon, superstations in Atlanta, Chicago and Oakland, Calif., and four Los Angeles independent stations.

The Cable/Pay edition will also have special editorial features for cable and pay cable subscribers including a three-page pay TV Guide section, network and pay TV movies, an "Update" column for cable/pay cable viewers, a separate letters column and a nightly grid of programs. It will be identified on the cover with a slash line—"Cable/Pay Edition"—running diagonally through the TV Guide logotype.

TV Guide officials saw the new edition as another step on a road TV Guide has been following for several years, offering cable program information in what they said is now a total of about 50 of the magazine's 101 regional editions.

off Daniels Properties, but that the most important one was to finance the privately owned firm's other cable operations.

Saeman said that the company was recently awarded the franchise for Anchorage and that it is also holding franchises for several communities in the Denver metropolitan area. "We will be concentrating on these first of all."

And Saeman doesn't want to look too far into the future. "At this point in time I think we will see our plate fairly full with financial commitments we have already made."

Things cool down between NAB and RAB over 'red hot' campaign

Former will furnish $17,000 for the promotional effort; funds will come from Radio Month budget

The National Association of Broadcasters has worked out with the Radio Advertising Bureau an agreement under which NAB will fund approximately $17,000 of RAB's "Radio It's Hot" campaign.

NAB's participation in the campaign is the result of eight months of negotiation. The dispute centered on the question of whether the NAB would contribute an outright grant or pay the bills for parts of the campaign in which it was a participant.

Arnold Lerner, chairman of NAB's radio board and chairman of WLLH(AM)-WSSH(FM) Lowell, Mass., said: "We have always supported the RAB campaign; we had volunteered and expressed enthusiasm for the concept and were preparing to do some promotion." The problem, if it could be called that, he said, was that "we, in our fiduciary capacity, responsible for the fees of our members just weren't going to hand money over. This, though, in no way changed our endorsement of the campaign."

At the NAB board meeting three weeks ago, a vote of 16-10 defeated a proposal to hand over the funds—the dissenters were largely members of the small stations who felt the campaign did not represent their interests.

Ben Hoberman, president of the ABC Radio Network, who put the proposal before the radio board, said: "We had no objection to working with RAB, but the board wanted to be more of a participant than a donor."

Elmo Ellis, chairman of RAB, said: "I think that all the time there was a sympathetic interest on the part of the board to give to the campaign, it was a matter of working things out—and the story has a happy ending."

Bernard Mann, president of Mann Media, High Point, N.C., disagrees, however. So much so, that he withdrew as a candidate for a NAB radio board seat in its upcoming election. Mann said: "I can't understand why it has taken [NAB] eight months to decide what to do—the campaign is already on." Furthermore, he thinks, "the board doesn't deal with issues we're faced with in a meaningful way." (Mann also feels the NAB is "copping out" on a "vital issue" by saying it needs more time to study the 9 khz matter among other things.)

NAB's contribution to the RAB radio campaign will be two-fold: First, NAB will pay for the reprints of four-color ads and a direct mail campaign to national and retail advertisers and agencies. The reprints will carry a credit line, saying they are courtesy of the NAB.

Second, NAB will pay the cost of distributing 200-300 campaign-designed radio sets.

Miles David, in a memo to the RAB board, said: "We're grateful to them for this cooperation and we know it was their desire to find an appropriate means of contributing."

The funds that NAB is contributing are essentially its funds for its National Radio Month campaign. Hoberman said this year's Radio Month will consist of the joint effort with RAB.

Cable creeps up on 20% penetration

Arbitron reports medium reached 1.8 million more homes in 1979; TV households add 1.9 million

Cable penetration of U.S. TV households increased by almost two percentage points in 1979, reaching approximately 18.7%, according to the Arbitron Television Census for 1979, conducted last November.

Arbitron figures showed cable penetration reached that level by adding 1.8 million homes during the year to a total of 14.2 million, while U.S. TV households increased almost 1.9 million to a total of 75.8 million. The 1978 penetration figure—12.4 million cable homes out of 73.9 million TV homes—was 16.8%.

Arbitron said the 10 markets with the largest number of cable households are New York, 930,800; Los Angeles, 617,500; San Francisco, 559,500; Philadelphia, 480,700; Pittsburgh, 400,200; San Diego, 255,500; Wilkes Barre-Scranton, Pa., 234,700; Seattle, 230,800; Cleveland, 210,600 and Boston, 208,200.

Arbitron placed the number of UHF television homes last November at 71.6 million, up 2.3 million from the previous year. UHF households now represent 95% of all TV homes in the U.S. with the highest penetration at 99% each in Chicago; Fresno, Calif.; Huntsville-Decatur-Florence, Ala.; New York; Lima, Ohio; Peoria, Ill.; Springfield, Mass., and Tuscaloosa, Ala.

The Arbitron census estimates that U.S. TV households having color sets totaled 64.4 million, an increase of 2.8 million over 1978. The figure represents 85% of all U.S. TV homes. Zanesville, Ohio, led all markets with color-set penetration of 95%, followed by Beaumont-Port Arthur, Tex., 94%; Dubuque, Iowa, and Reno, 93%, and Anchorage, Las Vegas and Palm Springs, 92%.

CBS RADIO FOR NORTHERN MICHIGAN

Buckley Radio Sales, Inc., National Representatives

In Tucson, Blair is now helping KAIR-AM and KJYK-FM beat the competition to the punch.

Tucson is one of the fastest-growing cities in the United States.

Consistently ranked as one of the strongest beautiful music markets in the country, two very smart stations have managed to become its exclusive sources for that sound. They are KAIR-AM and KJYK-FM.

KAIR is "The Power Beautiful Music Station" in the market and has been since 1968. KJYK is the most powerful radio station in southern Arizona.

The latest Arbitron says that the stations, ranked 1 and 3, are the best combination punch in the market, together delivering a 19 share.*

To make sure their story packs even more punch with advertisers, both KAIR and KJYK have named Blair Radio their national sales rep. Blair's got what it takes to help them keep winning – sheer aggressiveness and the skill and resources to back it up.

Blair, KAIR, and KJYK. Together, we're making things happen in radio.

The Key to lock up your markets

Golden Times

The Golden Times is America's new and most exciting concept in broadcasting. It is a double exposure marketing package that is demographically designed to skew perfectly to its target market—the homeowner and the 50 plus.

It's done with a daily 30-minute radio show and 4 one-hour, do-it-yourself, seasonal TV specials hosted by Donna Axum, a former Miss America. Golden Times is a perfect vehicle for the financial and home improvement/decoration advertiser. It's targeted to reach the audience and move them to your advertiser while improving your ratings. PUBLIC NOTICE

CABLE TV CONSULTANT DESIRED: The City of Tucson plans to retain a consultant to aid in the City's franchising (licensing) process. The consultant's work will include the drafting of a cable communications Request for Proposals, evaluation of those proposals and recommendation of award to the governing body. The consultant may also be requested to provide additional services as needed throughout the licensing process. No consulting firm (including associates, employees, subcontractors or their immediate families) will be considered which is itself engaged in, or is financially affiliated with (stock ownership or other equity interest) any company engaged in the construction or operation of cable communications systems, or in the manufacture or sale of cable communications equipment. Independent contractor relationships with cable communications companies or manufacturers of cable communications equipment must be disclosed on the City's application forms.

Consultants interested in being considered for the above project must submit a letter of interest to the Office of the City Attorney, P.O. Box 27210, Tucson, Arizona 85726 by February 19, 1980. The City will respond to the letters of interest by mailing to each interested consultant application forms which must then be submitted by March 5, 1980.

Inside ABC

American Broadcasting Company's Rise to Power

by Sterling "Red" Quinlan

Here's the complete story of the American Broadcasting Company's
spectacular climb to leadership after more than 25 years of continual third place network position. Sterling
"Red" Quinlan, former Vice President and General Manager of ABC's Chicago station, candidly tells of the people and events that have shaped the highly individualistic style of the network and made it the innovative force it is today. Based on extensive research including interviews with numerous past and present ABC employees, previously unpublished information from company files and the author's own experiences, IN-SIDE ABC offers a unique look into the executive suites of the broadcast industry. 320 pages, 39 photographs,

You could be wasting a lot of money making overnight decisions.

Take a 2-pound package. If you sent it Priority Mail between New York and Los Angeles, you'd pay only $2.83. Overnight services would cost you anywhere from $8.65 to $17.00 or more.

Priority Mail has the jump on overnight services in still another way.

It goes anywhere in the U.S., with delivery direct to the addressee.

Priority Mail also provides a full choice of options such as insurance, COD, return receipts, restricted delivery.

Of course, if you really need delivery overnight, there's Express Mail Next Day Service at 1600 Express Mail Post Offices. But if your package isn't in a great rush, ask for Priority Mail at the Post Office. It delivers in two to three days for one-third or less the price of overnight services.

Burchill: building up a lifesaver for RKO

If the phone rings at 1 a.m., answer it. That's one object lesson to be gleaned from Tom Burchill's catalogue of the steps that led to his post at the helm of the new-born RKO Radio Network.

Burchill's wee-hour call was from Dwight Case, RKO General's division president for radio. Case knew Burchill was attempting to go into business for himself by negotiating the purchase of the radio side of the rep partnership he was in, Bolton/Burchill Ltd. He offered Burchill a chance to "run a big show with a lot of resources" if only he'd stop "trying to build an empire with a couple of subway tokens and a library card."

Burchill gave up his plans for independence, and accepted Case's offer to be general manager of RKO Radio Sales, where Burchill presided over the doubling of the unit's sales volume in two years. Following that successful performance, Burchill was tapped to run RKO's ambitious new project, the young-adult-oriented RKO Radio Network, which began broadcasting last October and started 24-hour service via satellite on Feb. 1.

RKO has a lot riding on the project: The FCC decision last month to deprive RKO of three of its TV licenses (BROADCASTING, Jan. 28), if sustained on appeal, could end up stripping the General Tire & Rubber subsidiary of everything—13 more stations—but the network. Burchill makes it no secret that such a possibility, once considered remote by many observers, was part of the impetus for RKO's start of a network.

And while the whole matter was pending, the "FCC difficulties," says Burchill, "tied up our ability to go out and buy more stations ... or trade up from a smaller to a larger market." This made it impossible for RKO "to expand and grow in a broadcast way, as most other broadcast companies can." The solution, as RKO saw it, was to found a network.

"Expansion and growth" aren't simply business concerns of Burchill, who is looking to bring the network's affiliate count up to 250 by the end of 1981 from its present 65. Those factors are mirrored in his personal life: He's spending 15-20 hours a week working toward an MBA from Columbia University. Graduate school, he felt, was an unfulfilled goal in a career that took him from undergraduate school to the Navy and then marriage and work; now he's "broadening horizons."

"I love the broadening aspect," he says, but quickly adds, "I hate the work involved. I do think I'm more of a workaholic these days than ever before," remarks Burchill, who finds the job of starting up a new network "so totally absorbing that there is no rush to get home, and yet the next morning there is a rush to get to work.

"Thankfully, I have a wonderful wife," he says, ruefully acknowledging the strain such a schedule as his puts on a family. "When people ask me how I spend my spare time these days, I tell them I try to be with my family."

Burchill attributes a great deal to Dwight Case, not only calling him "the man singularly behind and responsible for the network," but also saying "no other person has had such a large single influence on my business life and the way in which I do business or practice the science or art of management."

A significant element of that management philosophy is what Burchill calls an "incredible environment of autonomy" that Case has fostered. Burchill says his managers set their own goals, making each individual "feel a part of the creative process." That's resulted, he claims, in "a real surrounding of exhilaration," a "feeling-good atmosphere."

According to Burchill, autonomy is part of a necessary recognition "that radio is incredibly entrepreneurial and marketing-oriented." The entrepreneurial nature of this network venture becomes clear in Burchill's discussion of its goals.

"We expect to be doing in excess of 10% of all [radio] network revenues in a very short period of time," Burchill maintains. And the network radio business, he stresses, is growing at an average annual rate of 17%, as good a growth figure as network television.

Burchill counts American Home Products, Kellogg's, Kraft, Campbell and Anheuser-Busch. among the advertisers already supporting his network. RKO's marketing effort, he says, won't concentrate on generating new broadcast advertisers, but rather on bringing those already in television to radio. "Our principal task is to go after the heavy TV spenders and show them that there are new avenues of reaching audiences with radio."

Attracting advertisers is, of course, only one part of a network's activity; affiliates must also be won. Programming for "the kind of stations following the population bubble as it gets older" is half of what the RKO Radio Network is offering stations. In this area, Burchill and his associates are programming to "address the needs of music radio," with a 25-34 demographic "the bull's eye of our target."

Burchill also puts a heavy emphasis on the "management resources" that RKO is making available to its affiliates. Stations, he says, unsure of what changes the 80's will bring, are looking for an "insurance policy" in the increasingly competitive world of radio. And that's produced "a very favorable response" on the part of stations to RKO's overtures.

Speaking of the stylish, modern (and not inexpensive) studios that RKO has created from the floor up for this new wing of its business, Burchill calls them "visible and attractive signs of RKO's long-term commitment to being in network radio."

And Burchill intends the performance of his new command to match his past successes. "Believe me, there is a very high return investment planned for this radio network within RKO's total financial picture."

The place to start

Mobil Oil Co. and its high-visibility vice president for public affairs, Herbert Schmertz, are back in the news with another dispute over rejected television commercials. The network O&O's refused a Mobil spot defending the company's profits (BROADCASTING, Feb. 4). The Post-Newsweek Stations canceled Mobil's six-part miniseries, Edward and Mrs. Simpson, which contains Mobil messages defending free enterprise (BROADCASTING, Jan. 28). Schmertz is once again charging broadcasters with censorship.

The networks and Post-Newsweek acted in accord with their well established policy that prohibits the expression of opinions on controversial subjects in advertising messages. They say such matters deserve the broader treatment that program-length presentation can provide.

There are other broadcasters who think otherwise. WNEW-TV New York, KTTV-TV Los Angeles and WJLA-TV Washington carried the spot that the O&O's turned down, a statement, delivered by a middle-aged spokesman, that Mobil's profits, as a percentage of return on investment, were less than those of ABC, CBS and NBC. Some 50 stations remain in the ad hoc network put together for the Mobil miniseries. The commercials in it are elaborate productions involving animation, live dancers and mimes, with voices-over reciting fables asserting the virtues of the profit system.

A sampling of the Mobil messages leads to the conclusion that they are harmless exercises in corporate PR. Indeed if the fables give any offense, it will be for insulting intelligence by their vacuity. The guess here is that the stations taking Mobil's business are also taking little risk of demands for time to reply.

Still no one expected three years ago that a Texaco commercial claiming efficiencies to be derived from the company's complementary operations would trigger an FCC fairness-doctrine ruling that forced WTOP-TV Washington to broadcast 30 one-minute arguments for oil company divestiture. WTOP, now WDM-TV, was then a Post-Newsweek station. An experience like that is enough to make policy against advertising that states a point of view.

The truth is, of course, that the fairness doctrine has conditioned many broadcasters to avoid controversy. As long as it is on the books, it, not ABC, CBS, NBC or Post-Newsweek, is Herbert Schmertz's real problem.

Sleeper

An overweight batch of reports from consultants to the FCC's network study staff was trundled last week into a world that wasn't really waiting for them. They tell more than anyone needs to know about the history and status of subscription television, cable television, multipoint distribution services, home video devices, programing on noncommercial television and FCC multiple ownership policy but less than everyone wants to know about the future of those ventures and conditions.

As term papers, the reports would probably deserve better than passing grades in the average university. What will they do for the taxpayers who are providing the $1.6 million that the FCC will have squandered by the end of this fiscal year on this pointless exercise? Good question.

The safe prediction is that no commissioner will ever read the mass of irrelevant information that the network staff is under orders to produce—except perhaps one report that stood out last week from the others. Professor Thomas L. Schuessler, of the University of Arizona law school, assigned to study the effect of the FCC's spectrum management on the number of television networks, brought a zinger in. The television system established by the FCC's 1952 Sixth Report ought to be unscrambled, Professor Schuessler says, and remade into an all-UHF system.

Broadcasters who were around in 1952 are sure to think this is where they came in.

As Professor Schuessler notes, in his highly selective history of television allocations and assignments, an all-UHF system was among the configurations seriously considered but discarded in the 1952 Sixth Report and was reconsidered after UHF fell upon hard times in the early growth period of television. The professor suggests that a craven FCC kept the VHF service to placate the pioneers who put 108 stations on the air while new television grants were frozen preceding the issuance of the 1952 design of the ultimate system. He de-emphasizes the public's stake in an abandonment of VHF at the time. Seventeen million owners of VHF-only television sets would have declared war on a UHF conversion.

Professor Schuessler scents a faint public interest that might be asserted now if the VHF service were ended. He notes that a constriction of service areas from V to U "poses the threat of withdrawing service from a relatively large number of viewers." He adds, without citing technical or economic evidence: "However, by employing greater transmission power, constructing taller antennas and utilizing booster and/or translator stations, this problem could be minimized or eliminated." A mere waving of the wand.

If the composition of the FCC were more mature, less concern would be precipitated by a work like Schuessler's. But in the same week that his report was coming out, FCC Chairman Charles D. Ferris was trying to dazzle a predominantly black audience in Los Angeles with visions of new stations dropping like plums out of the eighth floor at 19th and M Streets back in Washington. "We can also create new UHF and VHF stations by shoehorning in additional stations at less than the present mileage separation requirements," the chairman said, "and by making greater use of translators and other low-power television operations." If Ferris gets wind of the Schuessler report, nothing in television will be safe.

In 1952 the asserted purpose of the Sixth Report was to provide a public service. Is that standard to be abandoned too?
