CENTRES FOR POLYSACCHARIDE RESEARCH

The article by Professor BeMiller on the Whistler Center for Carbohydrate Research is the first in a series which will describe some of the major institutes working on carbohydrate polymers. The aim of the series will be to bring to the attention of readers, the scientists working in these institutes and describe the areas of expertise they contain. The editors would welcome further contributions to this feature from other research centres which have a significant research activity in the polysaccharide field.
