Letter from the Editor

Dear Readers:

Another year of issues is capped by this one. It is the hope of the Editorial Board to try to provide a balance of areas of interest in terms of the papers published in the Journal. At times this goal is set aside to provide a way to present the larger number of papers from a conference on a single topic, of course. It is important that when we have an issue on –e.g.– Environmental Chemistry—that it not be interpreted as a new emphasis area for Critical Reviews in Analytical Chemistry to the exclusion of others. Please contact the Editor-in-chief or any Board member if you would like to write an article or would like to suggest a topic for a review.

The Board and I have tried for quite a few years to encourage a special issue on the use of chemometric tools focusing on successful and failed application of a given technique or combination. I am happy to report that such an effort is underway and will be part of Volume 36 in 2006. Recognizing that this is a broad area within chemical measurement, the Journal is prepared to devote two issues to this topic. If a reader would like have a contribution considered for inclusion, she/he should contact the Editor-in-Chief and I will pass the idea to the guest editors for that issue. Papers in other, classical or very new areas are always encouraged, of course.

We wish you all a happy and productive 2006!

C. H. Lochmüller

Editor-in-Chief
