

Editorial

This fifth volume of Dyes and Pigments introduces two important changes. First, the number of issues will be increased from four to six thus reducing the undesirable publication delays which were arising due to the success of the journal in attracting good papers. Secondly, Dr A. T. Peters has agreed to become joint editor of the journal with me in order to cope with its increasing success. Dr Peters is a second generation colour chemist, his father having been a distinguished lecturer in the Colour Chemistry Department at Leeds University. Dr Peters is a Senior Lecturer in Colour Chemistry at the University of Bradford and has many publications in the field of dyestuff chemistry.
