

in mammographic density is an early event which occurs during the first months of therapy and thereafter remains stable during long term treatment with the same regimen. Still in many women no apparent increase in density will be detected. The individual response may be related to dose, type of regimen, route of administration but also to individual factors like age, BMI and individual sensitivity and enzymatic activity within the breast.

20Ultrasound as additional screening modality

INVITED

Abstract not received.