

Sounding Board

We intend to open our journal to a type of article expounding and discussing hypotheses suggested to the author by data available in the scientific medical literature. One condition for publishing such an article is that it should inspire original investigation and lead to the outline of a program of research capable of being carried out by the presently available methodology. For instance, the journal does not wish to publish still another theory of the genesis of cancer under this heading, but rather concrete data providing support for verifiable hypotheses.

The Editor proposes his contribution under this new heading. It will be up to the readers to judge whether it corresponds to the definition given above.

Interested readers are invited to propose their 'Sounding Board' contributions to the Editorial Office.
