Professor Peter Selby now Director of Clinical Research for Imperial Cancer Research Fund

The new Director of Clinical Research for Imperial Cancer Research Fund is Professor Peter Selby, Professor of Cancer Medicine at the University of Leeds and Director of the charity's Cancer Medicine Research Unit at St James' University Hospital, Leeds. Professor Selby's new post is in addition to his current duties.

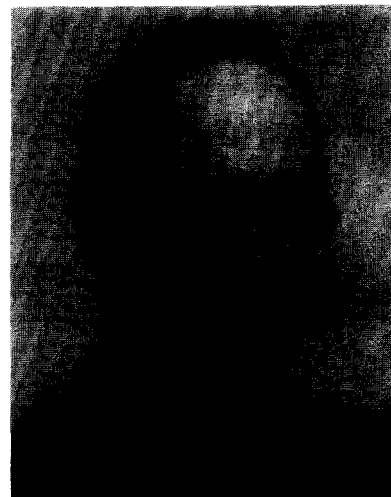

He succeeds Professor Nicholas Wright who recently gave up the post to become Dean of the Royal Postgraduate Medical School, Hammersmith and Vice-Principal of Imperial College School of Medicine.

Professor Selby set up specialist medical oncology services in Leeds in 1988 and, with support from the university, the NHS and other agencies, expanded it in Yorkshire to the point where it is now one of the largest and most successful regional oncology services in the country.

He became Director of ICRF's Cancer Medicine Research Unit in Leeds when it opened in 1993. His unit carries out a wide range of research together with clinical trials across a whole range of cancers.

Professor Selby is consultant adviser on cancer services to the Chief Medical Officer and was a leading member of the expert advisory group which proposed the re-organisation of cancer services in the U.K.
