

Editorial

This year the Netherlands Society of Plant Pathology celebrates its foundation 100 years ago, on 11 April 1891. It is therefore fitting that as of Volume 97 the society's journal, Netherlands Journal of Plant Pathology, will appear in a newly designed cover. The new design not only marks the society's jubilee but also the completion of the journal's internationalization, i.e. no more Dutch text in the journal, neither on the cover nor in the articles.

This volume begins with a contribution from Professor J.C. Zadoks: 'A hundred and more years of plant protection in the Netherlands', in which the author describes his views on past, present and future developments of plant protection. The article emphasises on the developments that have occurred in the Netherlands during this crucial period in the history of plant protection. Readers are encouraged to reflect on his views through letters to the editor.

The Editors