

PERSONAL NEWS

J.E. Scott, Manchester, has been awarded the Robert Feulgen Prize by the Gesellschaft für Histochemie. This annual award is made for the best work in histochemistry published during the preceding three years.

S. Hakomori has moved from the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center to The Biomembrane Institute as its Scientific Director. He is holding the same appointment as Professor of Pathobiology and Microbiology at the University of Washington. The institute is a non-profit research organization affiliated with the University of Washington, and its research is focused on glycoconjugates. The address of the institute is 201 Elliott Avenue West, Seattle, WA 98119, USA. Other scientists, S.B. Levery, E. Nudelman, H. Clausen, and B. Fenderson, have also moved to The Biomembrane Institute.

J Montreuil, Lille, has been elected "Membre Correspondant" of the Academy of Sciences of Paris.