Laughing in the face of the unthinkable

UST AS THERE are some sights you can never un-see, there are some sounds you can never un-hear, like the Holocaust denier in David Baddiel's fine documentary Confronting Holocaust Denial (Monday BBC2) who picks up a guitar and sings a chirpy song about the Holocaust.

Baddiel is admirably restrained (he's sat through this man banging on about how "Auschwitz had a swimming pool and bakeries") despite telling the camera beforehand: "I'm not Louis Theroux... to some extent I just want to punch this guy in the face."

It's a thoughtful, personal and intelligent look at an unspeakable phenomenon that finds oxygen with every Holocaust anniversary and which thrives in that playground of the bitter and the deluded, the internet.

From the deadly serious to the funny... Monday sees the return of This Country (BBC1 and BBC3) for what will be the third and final series of the clever mockumentary. I interviewed our cover stars (see page 10), the delightful siblings Charlie and Daisy May Cooper, about the comedy that grew out of their lives in a small Cotswold town.

But you don't have to come from the Cotswolds to love This Country and its inhabitants, Kerry and Kurtan Mucklowe. Anyone who grew up in any dull little community anywhere will recognise the casual boredom of living somewhere where there's nothing to do and nowhere to go.

> The first episode is touched by sadness, however, as it's dedicated to the the Coopers' close friend Michael Sleggs, who died cruelly young last year. He played the gormless Slugs, and in tribute the Coopers have written a story about their mate reaching from the heavens to torment Kurtan > > for the last time. As for drama, if you like a bit of gloom vou will welcome the second series of the Welsh noir crime mystery Hidden (Saturday BBC4).

WHAT GETS US TALKING...

MORE TRUE CRIME FROM ITV

It's not been long since Martin Clunes dazzled us in ITV's Manhunt, where he played Colin Sutton, the taciturn copper who caught killer Levi Bellfield. And last week saw the final episode of White House Farm, a forensic account of the Jeremy Bamber case. Now ITV has started work on

The Pembrokeshire Murders, a three-part mini-series about the pursuit of serial killer John Cooper for a brutal double murder in 1985 and another in 1989.

Luke Evans (left) plays investigating officer Steve Wilkins, who relied on a cult piece of British TV to catch his man: Cooper was a contestant on the Jim Bowen game show Bullseye in 1989 and footage was used in evidence against him. In fact, Wilkins's book upon which the drama is based is called Catching the Bullseye Killer. Keith Allen plays Cooper, with Owen Teale cast as prosecuting QC Gerard Elias. Says Evans: "It's a huge responsibility, as the drama depicts a crime which to this day still affects the families of those whose lives were tragically taken."

KISS ME KATE

It's not all murder on ITV, though. The broadcaster is bringing a new comedy called Kate and Koji to our screens later this year and it sounds rather jolly. The six-parter sees Brenda Blethyn star as Kate, the owner of a seaside café who forms a sparky friendship with Koji, an African asylum seeker, played by Jimmy Akingbola. Barbara Flynn and Meera Syal also star.

DELANEY'S DAY

Rob Delaney is putting the finishing touches to a new comedy pilot for Channel 4. It's a solo effort, not a new Catastrophe, but he won't rule out working with Sharon Horgan again. "We just need to live some more and gain some more experiences before we foist whatever we make on others," he told Radio 4's Loose Ends.

BILL'S PERFECT FORECAST

All the best ideas come from RT. In an issue of the magazine in March last year, the former BBC head of weather Bill Giles (below) called for a regular weather forecast focusing on the subject of climate change. Lots of people were interested in his idea and the BBC has just announced it's introducing a monthly "Climate Check" report as part of plans to increase global warming coverage. Says Giles: "I am very pleased that the BBC has taken the advice I gave in Radio Times to commission a regular monthly programme on climate change and only hope they do it in a way that is understandable by the general public and not just for scientists."

Who would want this job?

Finding a new director-general for the BBC will be tough ou will be paid almost half a million pounds a year, be in charge of Strictly Come Dancing and The Archers, and get to meet any star you choose. That is on offer this spring, as BBC Chair, Sir David Clementi, searches for a new director-general to replace Tony Hall, but strong candidates may refuse, on the grounds that what was once a dream job has become a nightmare.

The shape and attitude of the BBC result from being a rare business with an annual income (now £3.7 billion) guaranteed by the licence fee. However, with the government having just launched a consultation on decriminalising evasion of the licence fee, and further threatening reduction or axing of a yearly payment soon rising to £157.50, this income seems sure to diminish, with strong pressure to adopt an optional, Netflix-style subscription system.

Culture Secretary, Baroness Morgan of Cote, has warned that, without radical reform, the BBC risks becoming as redundant as Blockbuster, a firm that was famous for renting out videos, until other ways of watching came along.

So the DG job interview really comes down to two conversations:

1) If your policy is to seek to renew the licence fee from 2027 in its current form and value, how would you persuade the Johnson government of this? If you favour a different funding model, which one? And what changes would that entail for an organisation with 22,000 staff, a pension fund deficit of around £1.9 billion, and so many stars and managers on mega-salaries?

2) If you intend to change the BBC's structure and scope, how would you get reform past trade unions that have historically fought for every job, and a media that will present any internal opposition as your regime being in crisis?

Faced with those choices, would you still want

'DG is a job people may prefer not to do – even for half a million quid?

the job, even for the £450,000 a year that Hall got? And here lies Clementi's biggest problem. Four outstanding candidates are Dame Sharon White, now leading the John Lewis Group, after running broadcast regulator Ofcom; ex-Channel 4 head Jay Hunt, now in charge of Apple TV; current C4 boss Alex Mahon; and Tim Davie, chief executive of the BBC commercial arm, Worldwide.

Potential candidates for the DG job, from top: Alex Mahon; Tim Davie; Jay Hunt; Sharon White; and Charlotte Moore

Most organisations would love to select from that quartet of exceptional and commendably diverse talents. But Mahon and White both receive just under a million pounds annual basic pay, and Hunt's salary in the US, although unpublished, seems sure to be far north of UK rates. Davie earned £691,000 last year at BBC Worldwide, which is not directly funded from the licence fee.

o would these candidates accept steep pay cuts for the honour, but also very brutal public scrutiny, that being DG brings? If outsiders become unavailable for this reason, attention will turn inside. Some mention head of radio James Purnell, but making a former Labour minister BBC editor-in-chief would create a political fire> storm almost guaranteeing the Corporation's destruction. So Charlotte Moore, director of content (what used to be called programmes) looks the strongest in-house option.

> > The "winner" faces years of turmoil, internal and external. Many within the organisation still see no reason for anything much to change, but some in government make the case for changing almost everything.

Which is why DG is a job that some very talented and qualified people may prefer not to do - even for almost half a million quid.

WHAT WE WATCHED

The second, much anticipated series of Fawlty Towers was coming back three years after the first (a hiatus caused by many things, including the break-up of the marriage between writers John Cleese and Connie Booth). We met the main cast, including Andrew Sachs, who played the put-upon waiter Manuel. He revealed that a scene where his jacket caught fire in series one went wrong, ending up with him burning his shoulders. "In the summer it's the bit that doesn't get brown," he told us. "It looks as if my wings have fallen off. It still itches." He did, however, get £700 compensation from the BBC, he said.

WHAT YOU SAID

You were rather divided by Dennis Potter's Blue Remembered Hills, his moving and powerful play about a group of children (acted by adults including Helen Mirren and Michael Elphick) playing in the Forest of Dean one day in 1943. "Never have I seen just a repulsive play," said Margaret Sherrell from Bristol. GC Snow from the Isle of Wight was in tune with the more positive verdict of posterity when he described it as "brilliant", adding: "As I watched, transfigured... memories of my own childhood flooded into my mind." GRAHAM

Daisy May Cooper and her brother Charlie wrote a Bafta-winning comedy to beat boredom in the Cotswolds.

Now This Country is going out on a high

Fame has mocked Daisy May and Charlie Cooper, siblings and cowriters and creators of the beautiful, brilliant This Country, the Bafta-winning mock-documentary series that follows two bored codependent cousins, Kerry and Kurtan Mucklowe, who resolutely find nothing to do in their small Cotswold town.

The Coopers have Alan Bennett's ear for the overheard absurd, but now that they are so well known they can no longer absorb, anonymously, the rich comedy oxygen of village life, they have decided that this will be the final series.

What? No! That can't be possible, I wail pointlessly. Charlie, who plays Kurtan Mucklowe, that hopeless dreamer of small dreams, explains: "The difficult thing now [after the success of the first two series] is that we can't be anonymous any more. We can't go to the pub like we used to and just watch or listen to people, and writing the third series we definitely \triangleright □ didn't have so many of those unique bits. You are only ever as good as your last series, and we felt the pressure writing this one."

They are, Daisy says, "ready to try to write new stuff", although they both hope to write the occasional This Country special.

So Kerry and Kurtan – perpetually jobless (Kerry's employment in a recycling centre in the new series is brief, as was Kurtan's stint as the despotic bar manager at the bowls club), listless, juvenile and, particularly in the case of the bovine Kerry, plain thick – will leave us. After three series, where the Mucklowes have wrought havoc at a scarecrow festival, stored stolen vacuum cleaners, fought over oven space for a pizza and been menaced by local hard nut Big Mand, it will all be over.

OR ANYONE LIKE me, who holds This Country in their heart as one of the best comedies of recent years, it's a blow. But I have to admire the Coopers, whose love for their creation is so great that they don't want it ruined by being flogged into staggering beyond its natural life.

They are tremendous company, and the best interviewees – effusively friendly and appreciative towards everyone involved in our photoshoot, wide-eyed and grateful that RT should have gone to so much trouble.

But really, they are just a couple of kids (though Daisy is 33 and Charlie is 30) from the pretty Cotswold town of Cirencester, where Charlie still lives, with Daisy down the road with her husband and young daughter in Fairford.

We can't go to the pub and just listen to people any more

CHARLIE COOPER

This Country was born of their own experiences of being brought up in, leaving and then returning to Cirencester after university – Charlie to study sports science at Exeter, and Daisy to study acting at Rada in London. "We wrote This Country because we didn't have any money to do anything," says Charlie. "The only thing that kept us from boredom was writing stuff that made each other laugh. That was the genesis of the show."

After graduating, Daisy wasn't being cast in anything: "It was depressing, so I thought, 'I need to take control of the situation, otherwise it will be bleak." So she started writing.

"In the really early days we were just sitting in a room, typing," says Charlie. "I was only really meant to help Daisy type up some ideas, but I started chipping in and [the show] sort of happened organically..."

"We were back in Circumster after living in London," continues Daisy. "We were back, surrounded by all of these brilliant characters, so we thought, 'Let's write what we know."

The pair collected bits of dialogue and stories from the people they met, including urban myths such as that of the Fox twins. The story of these unseen freaks – half-human, half-fox, they live in the woods and walk on their knuckles – features in my favourite episode, in which Kerry and Kurtan embark on a long day's journey into night, trudging through the forest in a futile attempt to reach a steam fair, intended as a birthday treat for Kerry.

"The Fox twins story came from when I had nothing to do in the summer holidays and my dad [Paul Cooper, who also plays Kerry's on-screen dad] would take me into work. I remember him telling me a story about the Fox twins, who lived in the village and were really menacing. That stuck with me," says Charlie.

After getting nowhere very slowly – a handful of production companies showed interest, but the development process stalled – Daisy threw herself "in utter desperation" on the mercy of their dad's cousin, Mathew Baynton (The Wrong Mans). "I sent the script to him and said, 'Look, if there is any way you could pass it on to [BBC head of comedy] Shane Allen...' We were desperate."

Allen saw it and loved it, commissioning a whole series. "It was just when BBC3 was going online," says Charlie, "and they were commissioning a lot more stuff, so they just sort of let us get on with it. We had a free run really, it was amazing."

FTER DRIVING ROUND the Cotswolds, the Coopers decided the small town of Northleach would be the perfect location, as their hometown of Cirencester was too big, with too much to do. It has a nightclub, for heaven's sake.

Everything is filmed on location, to the delight of some Northleach residents, and the anger of others. "There's a woman there... she parked her Land Rover right in front of the camera while we were filming," says Daisy. "Our location manager asked her if she'd park next door and the woman went, 'No, I hate the show!"

MEETING AHOLOCAUST DENIER MADE ME FEEL SOILED AND ANGRY

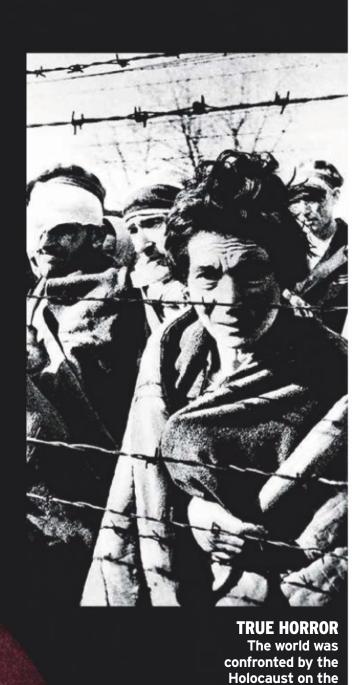

David Baddiel hated the idea of engaging with people who deny the truth – so why did he do it?

THE RT INTERVIEW BY

JONATHAN FREEDLAND

liberation of

Auschwitz in 1945

It's no surprise that David Baddiel agonised over whether he should meet a real-life denier of the Nazi murder of six million Jews for his BBC2 documentary, Confronting Holocaust Denial. On the one hand, surely he was obliged to tackle the very phenomenon he was seeking to expose. As he puts it, you can't talk about the Devil without showing the Devil. On the other hand, wasn't he risking lending legitimacy to such people by giving them a platform, not in an obscure corner of social media but on national television?

What's less expected is that the programme includes Baddiel's agonising on screen. We hear him debate the rights and wrongs of his dilemma, including with experts who strongly advise him to steer well clear of those who would deny the truth of what is one of the most thoroughly documented crimes in human history.

It's no spoiler to reveal that the comedian, bestselling children's author, playwright and Twitter obsessive eventually ignores those counselling caution and does indeed come face to face with a man who tells him that the Holocaust is an invention of lying, cheating Jews. But, I suggest when we meet in a room above a north London pub, surely that was all for show, the dilemma bogus; surely he and the programme-makers' minds were already made up?

Not a bit of it. "It totally wasn't decided beforehand," he says. "And actually, I was very uncomfortable with lots of it. And do you know what? Not just in terms of putting [the denier] on telly, but emotionally. I thought, 'I don't want to have to meet these horrible people. They're just going to make me feel soiled and upset and angry, and it's going to be horrible, and what am I doing agreeing to meet people like that?" In short, he'd worried what such a meeting would do "for my sanity, for my wellbeing".

The confrontation scene takes up only a few minutes of screen time and soon strays into the bizarre, as the Holocaust denier pulls out a guitar and performs an anti-Jewish ditty or two, a performance Baddiel describes as the denier's "own personal antisemitic Woodstock".

Baddiel's work since he first became a stand-up sensation in the late 1980s will know that his trademark is total candour – "I'm always more interested in being honest than being cool." Much as he admires Louis Theroux, he says, he is not in the same business. He won't be able to smile benignly, apparently non-judgemental, as he teases out the repugnant views of his interviewees. "I'm expressing a point of view. I'm not offering a blank canvas, on which the audience simply makes up its own mind. I wanted to write a TV essay, in which I would say what I think, directly to the camera."

Nor is it simply a history of the phenomenon of denying the Holocaust, though that is what BBC2 initially asked for and what Baddiel does, in part, provide. Fascinatingly, he shows how denial was embedded in the Holocaust from the very start. It's what the Allied liberators feared: Baddiel is struck by a quotation from Eisenhower, who worried that the atrocities discovered at Bergen-Belsen or Auschwitz-Birkenau might soon be attributed to mere "propaganda".

More unsettling is the document Baddiel examines at the National Archives in Kew, a memo from a British official warning that stories of Nazi atrocities will only be effective in the eyes of the British public if the victims can be shown to be "indisputably innocent". That, writes the official, means the victims must include no violent criminals, and no Jews. To Baddiel, "that was a very serious form of denial. It was laying the ground for a general sense of disbelief towards the Holocaust."

Most important of all, the Nazis were bent on denying their crimes even as they committed them. Baddiel visits Chelmno, the site of a death camp in Poland whose name is not seared into the collective imagination the way Auschwitz's is, for one reason: as with Treblinka or Sobibor or Belzec or Majdanek, there were barely any survivors. Auschwitz combined the business of industrialised murder with a labour camp, from which many thousands lived to tell the tale.

This was one reason why Baddiel was insistent from the start that, whatever else was involved in making this programme, he wasn't going to Auschwitz. Partly "because I think there's a bit of Auschwitz fatigue on the telly," and partly because that place was the exception, not the rule. Baddiel puts it starkly: "At its very, very basic level, the best form of Holocaust denial was just to kill everyone. Because then no one tells the story."

On the site of Chelmno, a historian tells him that the Nazis used acid, explosives and napalm to eradicate every trace of the slaughter they had committed there. After the bodies of some 200,000 Jews had been burnt in crematoria, the Nazis crushed the remains in a mill and either dumped or distributed the ash to nearby farms for use as fertiliser. Chelmno was a crime scene, but one the Nazis worked hard to scrub clean. They took similar steps to cover their tracks at Auschwitz, but ran out of time.

The postwar deniers picked up where the Nazis left off. There was old-school denial, embodied by the pseudo-historians and pseudo-scientists who would attempt to argue through \triangleright □ diagrams and chemical samples that the Holocaust couldn't have happened – until their leading light, the British agitator David Irving, was deemed to be nothing more than a "pro-Nazi polemicist" by the High Court in London, after Irving sued US historian Deborah Lipstadt for libel because she had dared to brand him a Holocaust denier – and lost.

These days, says Baddiel, the face of Holocaust denial is not a frustrated academic clutching a self-published book, but websites "like the Daily Stormer, which are massively read by slightly punky young men," who get a kick from showing a middle finger to the consensual, "reverent" view of the Shoah.

ADDIEL MEETS LIPSTADT and accepts her view that there is hardcore denial - claiming the Holocaust never happened - and a much wider range of what she calls "softcore denial". In pursuit of an example in that latter category, he travels to Lithuania, where he meets those trying to lionise a wartime nationalist leader who'd signed documents sending Lithuania's Jews to their deaths. "The refusal to see him as a collaborator is a form of Holocaust denial," says Baddiel, before conceding that this might be a function of the fact that Lithuanians have had only a brief experience of independence and not had long to "write their own history". Then, as if worrying that he might be going soft, Baddiel hurries to say that that still doesn't make it OK.

And this is how Baddiel thinks, wary of seeing any question in simple binaries of black and white. He hears a Palestinian scholar explain that high rates of Holocaust denial in Gaza owe more to a desire to hurt Jews in their most sensitive spot than a genuine refusal to believe the facts. Baddiel understands that logic – then admits to the camera that his own understanding has made him "uneasy" because, as he tells me later, "Where does understanding shade into legitimacy, into saying 'This isn't quite so bad'? The next thing you know, you're accepting Holocaust denial. In the film, that's the point at which I'm most uncertain."

It made me wonder if he should have covered the topic at all, not least because, as he tells the camera early on, polls show only six per cent of Britons deny the Holocaust. Shouldn't these cranks be left in a dark corner somewhere, safely ignored? Baddiel brushes that objection aside, and not only because, as he says, that six per cent only refers to hardcore deniers, failing to include the softer variants. For one thing, "I don't think this is going away by ignoring it." Besides, the core point is that those on the margins who deny the factual truth are contaminating the wider conversation. As if to make his point, in one jawdropping interview a Facebook executive tells him, "We're not automatically removing all Holocaust denial: we're looking for something more explicitly racist." Baddiel fires back that Holocaust denial is inherently racist, because it asserts that Jews are liars and frauds on a massive, global scale.

Which means he speaks with some force when he says: "Holocaust denial is one example of it, but I'm afraid these people with their distortions of truth are affecting us all. Even if you're not on social media, you feel it. You feel the truth is under attack, objectivity is under attack." Baddiel believes that the foundation of this assault, its starting point, is the attempt to deny the Holocaust. It is, he says, "a kind of ur-lie, a kind of archetypal, central, conspiratorial lie".

Which is what leads him to be in a room with a denier named Dermot Mulqueen in the Irish Republic as the latter makes a series of headspinning claims. Baddiel is clearly driven by a desire not to persuade or even argue with Mulqueen, but to understand him and his attraction to such an upside-down view of the world. Baddiel has concluded that it's nothing to do with history or facts, but rather a desire on the part of the denier to believe "that I know something the world does not know. And that makes me an important person." He adds, "I end up feeling slightly sorry for Dermot," who he thinks is consoled by the belief that he is privy to some secret knowledge. "It's a weird place to find comfort, but the world made more sense to him."

To me, Mulqueen seems like a soft target. In the programme, Baddiel even refers to the danger of shooting fish in a barrel. But his answer is instant. "So would you have preferred a very, very convincing, very reasonable Holocaust denier?" Besides, he says, Mulqueen reflects what most committed deniers are actually like.

Rachel Levy, a survivor of the Holocaust who calmly and clearly tells her own story. It is heartbreaking. "I had such a powerful reaction to Rachel's testimony," he says, and he thinks the audience will, too, especially after everything that precedes it. "You've gone into such darkness and such lies and then you get to the crystal-clear water of the truth." For him, that dispels any uncertainty he had about making the film. He believes his film does not merely re-assert the truth, "it enhances the truth. We end up, I hope, in a place where the truth has won."

I agree with him, and yet I worry about the day when there are no more Rachel Levys around to settle the argument with their own experience. Baddiel worries about that, too. The Holocaust is an event, he says, that is both unbelievable in its horror and also true, which means the truth of it will always be attacked. Still, for now, there is that footage of Levy recalling her experience. That counts as one small act of preservation of the truth. Baddiel's film is another – and all the more admirable for it.

LOVE LONDON. AND not just London -I love the UK," says David Schwimmer, one sixth of unarguably the most famous TV comedy ever. Although there's one staple of British life he simply can't get his head around. "Marmite. That is still completely perplexing to me. I've tried it and I really want to understand it," he laughs. "How is that still a thing?"

Controversial breakfast spreads aside, there's one thing we can all agree on: Friends has made more of a cultural impact than any other sitcom. Debuting in 1994 and running for ten years and 236 episodes, it was the generation-defining comedy in which Schwimmer starred with Courteney Cox, Jennifer Aniston, Lisa Kudrow, Matt LeBlanc and Matthew Perry.

The self-confessed Anglophile says he no longer has a base over here following his separation from wife Zoë Buckman, 34 - the British artist and photographer with whom he has an eight-year-old daughter, Cleo. That said, he admits to being a fan of British television, citing Fleabag, The Fall ("Jamie Dornan was phenomenal"), Luther and The Great British Bake Off as some of the shows he enjoys. "I love it," he says of 'Celebrity is like an old jacket I have to take out and put on?

Bake Off. "There's such a good spirit on that show. It's competitive, but everyone's so lovely with each other. It's so not American!"

Baking aside, it's thanks to comedian, actor and writer Julia Davis that we'll be seeing Schwimmer on British TV this week, in his first new comedy since Friends. "I'm a massive fan of hers and have been since Human Remains with Rob Brydon," he explains, "and that's how I met Nick."

Nick is Nick Mohammed - the British comedian who's written new Sky 1 comedy Intelligence, in which he co-stars with Schwimmer. Set in Britain's security headquarters, GCHQ, Mohammed plays inept computer analyst Joseph, who's starstruck when hotshot National Security agent Jerry (Schwimmer) arrives from the States as part of a new intelligencesharing initiative.

Intelligence, with Nick Mohammed Schwimmer's involvement as Joseph came about after Mohammed filmed a Channel 4 pilot (which was never screened) with Davis, Morning Has Broken. Schwimmer "got wind of it", according to Mohammed, with the US star doing workshops and improvisations with the show.

POWER COUPLE

As Jerry in

"I was just so impressed by his comic timing," says Schwimmer of Mohammed. "I was hoping that we would find something to do together, but since the first thing didn't work out, he emailed me this idea [for Intelligence]. I thought it was really timely and original, and that a workplace comedy set in the high-stakes world of cyberterrorism and cybercrime was unique."

His character Jerry is loud and brash, and a lot of what comes out of his mouth could've been taken straight from a Donald Trump press conference. Would that be fair to say?

Schwimmer laughs. "It's really fun for me to play, because it's quite cathartic. It's taking all the stuff that's upsetting or angering me in the current climate - at least in my country, if not both of ours - and putting it into human form," he says. "While we are never explicit about what political party Jerry belongs to, his arrogance combined with his ignorance and his misogyny, homophobia, racism and aggression is reminiscent of..." he trails off. "You know, it's reminiscent of a lot of our politicians at this time."

Jerry is also the antithesis of Ross in Friends - although it's not a contrast I'm able to draw as I'm told several times before talking to Schwimmer that I'm not to mention the "F" word to him. It's unclear exactly why, but an overzealous PR interjects as I ask about his former Friends co-star Jennifer Aniston joining Instagram last October and posting a picture of the six reunited sitcom stars having dinner together. To date the post has garnered more than 15.7 million likes.

Schwimmer's own social media presence is modest. Despite having accounts on Twitter and Instagram - where he has 3.6m followers - he has only ever sent 11 tweets and made seven Instagram posts.

"I don't have a lot of thoughts, really," he says. "I just don't have a lot of interest in posting a lot. I guess

I have a natural aversion to how obsessed people are with themselves today. I don't think it's really healthy, to be honest, that everyone is growing up believing that everything they do, everything they think and everything they eat needs to be shared. I think it's quite presumptuous, actually."

HIS SEEMS TO reflect his attitude more broadly to fame. Now 53 years old and living in New York, he keeps a low profile and walks around "quite anonymously. I'm usually with a cap on, or a backpack, or both, and I'm just doing my thing."

Anonymity isn't always possible, of course, when 52.5m viewers in the US alone tuned in to the final episode of Friends in 2004. Schwimmer has previously spoken about his difficulties with the almost unfathomable level of fame he commands, although this has softened over the past 25 years.

"The intensity of the celebrity has mellowed quite a bit since the show aired. That's calmed down a lot. And I think my aversion to it has calmed down accordingly."

Friends continues to have an enormous impact, however. In 2018 it was named the UK's most popular show on paid-for streaming services and repeats are shown continually all around the world. Attention is still very much something Schwimmer has to deal with.

"If I'm in a restaurant, having dinner with my friends, or a work dinner or maybe it's a date... I feel I shouldn't have to take time out to serve someone else's needs by taking a photo or signing something," he explains. "That's my time, and I'm a human being, and I feel I shouldn't have to do that – unless it's a young person," he qualifies. "If it's a child, then it's always yes."

The analogy he produces for his fame is that it's like "an old jacket I have to take out of the closet. When I know I'm going to a specific event or a place, it's usually for work. Let's say that I'm going to the opening of a Broadway show that a buddy of mine is in, then I know I should expect it. I put on the jacket of 'I'm a public figure' and I have to be more open to taking photos with people, signing things and being that guy. I'll wear it for the night, and when I get home, I take it off. And then I'm just me again."

My comedy hero

Susan Calman says she was destined to be a stand-up from the moment she saw Victoria Wood perform The Ballad of Barry and Freda in 1988

I'm often asked why on earth I wanted to be a stand-up comedian. People shake their heads and mutter about how brave I am, and how they would rather die than set foot on stage. In fact

I think I was destined to do what I now do for a living, and it can all be traced back to a cold December night in 1988 when, aged 14, I sat down with my family and watched An Audience with Victoria Wood.

I sat on our sofa in our living room and suddenly realised who I was meant to be.

This may sound like horrific hyperbole but the impact of one television show and one woman cannot be overstated. In the 1980s, ITV recorded a series of programmes with famous funny people doing what they do best. An Audience with... was a rare opportunity to watch comedy in its purest form. A microphone, an audience, no laughter track. A simple set with a stage and a piano off to the side.

I didn't know she was a stand-up and I didn't really know what a stand-up was. But I immediately connected with her.

Victoria was a master of the stand-up form for one simple reason: her language. She was so specific in how she described people and places and things that you knew exactly what she was talking about. She was the definition of observational comedy, but I think she does something that's very different to many comics. She has a streak of the bizarre in her.

This may sound a bit strange but I always think of the 1960s television show The Prisoner when I listen to Victoria. That puzzling TV show took place in an ordinary place that wasn't ordinary. It was skewed, out of balance; the perspective was deliberately off. And I always imagine the places she describes in that way. For such a relatable comedian, she was, in many ways, an absurdist and a surrealist.

HE MAJORITY OF An Audience with Victoria Wood was taken up with an incredibly involved story, which is, I think, the greatest stand-up routine of all time. It starts in the supermarket where someone is staring at her and she pays no attention because people often think she's Dawn French and ask her, "What's it like being married to Lenny Henry?" This throwaway line becomes a punchline about 40 minutes later - something that shows not only her own confidence, but also Victoria's confidence in her audience. She knows that we will be right there with her for the whole journey.

We're then transported from the checkout, along the high street, across the road where the little green man is flashing – "I wish the police would move him on" - into the department store. Every time I walk into my local John Lewis I laugh as I imagine entering at the leotard and handbag department. Then to the cosmetics department where the most a woman says that the make-up is available in all colours of the speculum? And with that one mistake I could see the woman. She aspires to be something she isn't, she uses a word that she's heard but she doesn't quite get right. She wants to be more than she is. With one word, Victoria paints a picture worthy of Van Gogh.

Watching her then and in the rest of her

4 sat on our sofa and realised who I was meant to be career, what's tremendously interesting is that Victoria never really talks about herself. There's a joke in the comedy industry that you can win awards with what's called "Dead Dad" shows - a derogatory term for the deeply personal shows where a comedian exposes their soul for the audience to enjoy. Victoria didn't do that. She created a world that she inhabited but it was the "her" that she wanted people to know and she did it so simply and brilliantly.

A change of posture and she's the pianist Connie Mottershead. An overcoat buttoned up to the neck and a beret and she's a sweet young woman looking for her friend Kimberly. A clipboard and she's doing a survey that contains the most variations of the phrase "bona fide" you will ever hear.

She is, of course, remembered for more than just her stand-up. Her songwriting transcends the comedy genre. There are two songs in an Audience with Victoria Wood, but it's The Ballad of Barry and Freda that really stands out in the show and it's probably the song that she's best known for. It's about an underperforming man but it's performed with vigour. I don't think a more perfect piece of comedy has ever been produced. Any song that includes the line "Bend me over backwards on me hostess trolley" is a triumph.

ARRY BECOMES INCREASINGLY dour, as Freda is increasingly hysterical in her demands for sex. Intentionally, I suspect, the pace and ridiculousness increases until it reaches a crescendo of joy. In my opinion, if you can't shout, "Beat me on the bottom with a Woman's Weekly!" at the top of your voice, then you haven't lived.

I wonder if anyone in that audience had any idea of what that show would mean. How long its influence would last. And how it would provide us all with the most incredible memories of the greatest comedian I think this country has ever produced.

This is an edited version of Susan Calman's Essay on Radio 3 on Tuesday at 10.45pm after a fall in her Spanish hideaway, but the woman who gave us so many memorable TV moments – and recorded a series of hits that provided a soundtrack to the 60s

– is about to return to our television screens as the star of her own home movies.

It was while emptying the family home in 2017 prior to it being sold that Black's son Robert Willis found an unusual cache in the attic. "There were a whole range of items up there. The outfits from her 60s TV shows, kids' toys... and old Super 8 films, in these old plastic trays that had once had dog food in for the family's pet briards." Cilla and her husband Bobby lived in the house in Denham, Buckinghamshire, for almost 50 years and rarely threw anything away, hence the unorthodox storage methods.

Willis digitised the films and now, excerpts of a young Cilla and Bobby globetrotting at the height of her 60s fame feature in the new ITV documentary Cilla: the Lost Tapes. "There's some great footage of their travels in the Far East, Australia, Fiji, East Berlin and also their skiing holidays. The thing that jumps out is the chemistry they had.

"They were quite young – Dad was about 26, Mum was 25 – and the films show their sense of adventure and fun. They're visiting parts of the world that were incredibly exotic – to see them larking around in front of the Sydney Opera House as it's being built captures a moment in time."

Many of the films are silent, but the star's views come courtesy of audio interviews recorded by ghost-writer Barbara Nash for Cilla's 2003 autobiography, What's it all About?. The cassettes were found tucked away. "They were in the pantry in a carrier bag, behind a 1970s fondue set," says Willis. But Cilla's voice is clear, as are Nash's recollections:

"Cilla was bliss and hell to interview. Bliss because she was so lovable and such fun when in verbal incontinence mode. Hell because she was forever wanting to play and drink 'bolly' even though it was only 11am and we were up against a tight publisher's deadline. Trying to pin her down in Barbados, where we were working on the book, was a nightmare. Cliff Richard and Ringo Starr were on the island, so need I say more?

"But once, when she'd upset me by wanting to play too long and work too little, she recorded a CD especially for me, of Have I Told You Lately That I Love You?. By then, she was in her 60s, but her voice sounded as wonderful as it did in her 20s. These days, it only takes a glass of 'bolly' to remind me of our time together." DAVID BROWN

CILLA IN HER OWN WORDS

◆ ON THE SONG ALFIE

"I was very much my own person. It took a long time to convince me to sing the theme song [for the film starring Michael Caine, left with Cilla]. I thought, 'Alfie is what you call your dog, or your budgie'. I said I'd do it if Burt Bacharach did the arrangement and played in the session — in London. He agreed to everything, so I couldn't back out. Mind you, I'm so pleased he did."

ON MARRYING BOBBY WILLIS IN 1969 ▶

"We had big stars on the BBC series Cilla and Bobby would invite them out for dinner.
There was some discussion and Bobby said, 'It was like this...'
And I said, 'No, it wasn't'. The Beatles' PA Peter Brown said, 'You sound like an old married couple, why don't you do it?'.
Bobby looked at me, 'OK, you fix it up.' The wedding ring was a friendship ring that Bobby bought in Hong Kong."

■ ON APPEARING ON A ROYAL TELEVISION GALA PERFORMANCE IN 1970

"Being pregnant [with Robert], I created a little bit of history. Up until then, the Queen had never knowingly been presented to a pregnant woman. I was really almost dropping, so they had to ask permission from the Palace. It was an unfortunate song to sing on the show because it was Oh Pleasure Man (You've Done it Again)."

◆ ON RINGOSTARR'S PROPOSAL

"He was like a best friend. Just for a giggle, he asked me to marry him. Well, he was desperate – all the other Beatles had girlfriends. Or were married, as in John's case. I guess he was the odd one out."

▼ ON LIFE WITHOUT BOBBY, WHO DIED AT THE AGE OF 57, IN 1999

"It's hit me - Bobby [below with Cilla, in 1996] ain't coming back, he's gone. It's taken two-and-a-half years for it to sink in. Everyone's said to me since he died, 'You don't realise how lucky you were.' I'd give my right arm to have Bobby back.

"When Bobby was dying of cancer, he said, 'Go on and do it'. Lights, camera, action. You go out there and do it because you're a professional. You're trained to do this. Well, life trains you to do this. Showbusiness trains you. God knows how I did, but I did. But I'd be a total wreck after the show."

◆ ON FEMINISM

"I'm the original girl power.
I was going out headlining and pulling crowds in, thousands of people. And I had an all-male bill below me, there was nobody doing that. I was the original women's libber, trust me. If I didn't turn up one day and that show was cancelled, all those men were out of a job and couldn't work. I was responsible for a lot of people."

"Before they went on a date, you didn't really see the contestants' personalities. In a way, that was what made the public switch on the following week. Especially if you had a lunatic on, which would always make me giggle. Or a character (I shouldn't call them lunatics). A character who I could bring out the best in. It was the 'Did you see?' factor."

It has huge spines that can reach up to 4m long. Every two years it explodes into purple flowers and then you're left with a rotting 4m spear for another two years to remind you of what could have been. They are so weird and outsized in the garden – they're remarkable things and I love them.

The TEA BUSH, CAMELIA

it's very refreshing.

■ What I like most about GARDEN SNAILS is their sleeping habits. I'm not an animal specialist, but I know that some snails can sleep for three years. I'm enchanted by the process. Snails need moisture. When the weather is wet they sleep normally, but when the weather is dry they can go into an aestivation, a summer sleep. They secrete a mucus that they cover themselves in and just drop off.

Almost a billion animals have died in Australia during the bushfires, including many KOALAS. They have evolved to survive in one place: eating eucalyptus, they can only live in Australia. If global warming means that Australia catches fire, then the koalas go with it. Koalas also have fingerprints that are indistinguishable from human fingerprints. I imagine, in my wilder moments, that koalas have been committing crimes for years, then disappearing and leaving some human to take the flak.

■ Nature is my solace and I still go to Cornwall whenever I can as there is so much to see there. My bucketlist Cornish animals to get close to are the

you can see from the coast. I have come very close to swimming with a dolphin, but sadly it's never happened. There was one in a bay in Cornwall and we ran to the water, but it had got bored by the time we got there. Annoying!

I wanted to pet it so badly.

■ I think there's a danger we can become obsessed with super-cute animals, like dolphins and koalas, so I want to draw your attention to the BLOBFISH.

It's not super-cute, it's one of those creatures where you look at it and go, "Oh no, it looks like someone's sneezed." It's a deep-sea creature, and lives in the waters around Australia at depths of up to 3,900 feet. There's a lot of pressure down there and when you bring a blobfish to the surface it collapses and looks like Jabba the Hutt. But I like it.

▲ What I love especially about COMMON OR GARDEN GRASS is how it reacts to being mown. There's a sort of scream — which isn't audible, but what you can smell is still an alarm signal of panic. It's extraordinary that some plants can communicate an attack like this, but also utterly pointless, evolutionally speaking, as the grass isn't able to go anywhere. Instead it sits there, moaning about its impending doom to other blades of grass that are just as helpless.

▶ I travel a lot and when I come home, an APPLE TREE is one of those quintessentially British sights that tells me I'm back. We're blessed in this country to have such an extraordinary variety of apples and so many different flavours. The delicious possibilities in an orchard in the autumn is astounding. And I devour an apple crumble. I'm not so sure about cider, though... it reminds me of drinking it as a child and being ill. But apple trees are a source of wonder. AS TOLD TO MICHAEL HODGES

Blind dates and

Hema Sabina and Ajai Kalia got married after meeting on First Dates – so what's it like to find love on TV?

Merlin's magic!

HERE CAN'T BE many married people on the planet who have a video record of the very first moment they laid eyes on their eventual spouse. Step forward Hema Sabina and Ajai Kalia, one of – to date – three couples to have got hitched after meeting on Channel 4's First Dates.

"It's crazy, I know," agrees Hema, who was 32 when they met in April 2016. "Usually after a date you go home and tell friends and family about it – but in our case all of them got to see the whole thing when it aired four months later."

Reader, prepare to park all cynicism. In an age when reality TV is not as real as all that, it's rather lovely to discover that Ajai and Hema are exactly the people they have seemed on screen since the original programme and in assorted joyful updates documenting their continuing relationship, engagement, and wedding last summer – Hema of the fabulous smile and cool haircut, Ajai of the kind face and wonderful eyes. Even though this interview takes place at the end of a long day – Ajai is an accountant, and Hema works in photography – their conversation bursts with bliss.

Four years ago, Ajai was new in London and didn't know many people. "I'd tried dating apps but nothing stuck," he remembers. "I was quite lonely on Friday evenings with my bottle of wine and dinner, watching First Dates. My mates said to me, 'Either stop watching or apply'. So I did. Two weeks later the show got back to me."

Hema had to wait longer to get on the show. "It was a few months before I heard," she says.

'It never occurred to me that I'd found the one'

HEMA

"I'd been quite rubbish at dating apps. I tried clubs and classes, which didn't work either, and then I was watching First Dates with my friends and they said I should apply. But I didn't tell my parents – on the day of the shoot I told them I was going to a friend's birthday party."

Ajai confided in no one. "I had a real fear on the way to filming," he says. "I just wanted someone who wasn't a complete nightmare."

Their encounter was filmed at Paternoster Chop House near St Paul's Cathedral in London (the series following this one will move to a new restaurant in Manchester later this year). Ajai

Barman Merlin, who played a small but crucial role in Ajai and Hema's romance was sitting at the bar talking to barman Merlin when he first glimpsed the woman he would marry. His immediate thought: "She's beautiful."

Hema's first impression was not so good. At that time Ajai was in possession of a lavish moustache. "That was not my usual type," she says. "In the application I even said 'no moustache'. But he made me laugh so much, and his eyes were amazing. It never occurred to me I'd found the one. I just knew I'd met a really great person."

Ajai was feeling similarly positive, despite several hurdles. First Hema was rather frank about the moustache, then he confessed to having proposed three times previously – Hema took that one admirably in her stride – and finally she disappeared for an overlong visit to the loo, to deliver a lengthy phone update to her girlfriends. But Ajai wasn't deterred. "I did think there was something in this date," he says. "Her smile was amazing. Still is."

The next day Hema confessed to her parents that she had not been at a friend's birthday party after all. "It was eating me up," she giggles. "My mum screamed the house down with excitement. My dad was happy once he understood what First Dates was. They were both so excited, but I had to remind them it was just one date. I wasn't getting married or anything."

But from there things moved forward at a pace. On their third date, Hema accompanied Ajai to the barber to witness the removal of his prized moustache. "I was a bit hurt she didn't like it," he grins. "I put so much effort into growing it." Not long after that, Ajai introduced Hema to his six-year-old daughter. "I was careful, but once I knew Hem was in it for the long haul, it was right," he says. "The two of them got on so well – it didn't take long for my daughter to ask for the same haircut."

By the time their episode aired in August 2016, the L-word had long since been exchanged and the pair threw a party so their family and friends could all watch together. "I was really nervous," says Ajai. "But it was great. I never think of millions of other people watching with us. The amazing part of being paired with Hema is that from the moment we first spoke it just felt like a normal date. I got what I wanted – a wonderful person."

or the fourth time in his life, Ajai found himself planning a proposal and by November 2017, he had it all ready. "I did the traditional stuff, asking her parents first. I was nervous in case they said 'No', but they were thrilled. I got Hema's sister's help in choosing the ring, so I only had to get my part right – going down on bended knee one evening."

Hema was shocked. "But it was a very easy question to answer," she smiles. They married at the end of last summer – first a small civil ceremony in London, and then a three-day bash with 120 guests two weeks later in Majorca.

"The wedding was perfect," says Hema, "and married life is great. I love saying 'Hello, husband' when he comes through the door." She laughs at the mention of babies. "Not just yet. We haven't even had time for our honeymoon."

Ajai interrupts: "I want as many babies as possible, as quickly as possible. We should name our first Merlin, because I was talking to him at the bar when I first saw Hem. Even if it's a girl, it's going to be Merlin." They dissolve into laughter.

They still watch the show, and both are for thankful for it. "I recommend going on First Dates all the time," says Hema. "Just do it! Apply! You never know. The person for you could be waiting there, just like they were for us."

T20 made batters reinvent cricket with outrageous strokes

Women's T20 World Cup: Australia v India Fri 7.30am, Sky Cricket/Mix, 8am Sky Main Event 7.45am 5 Live Sports Extra morph into something completely different. Divers and gymnasts have found more somersaults, skaters more revolutions, high-jumpers have turned upside-down and everyone in every sport is faster, stronger, fitter and better coached. That's more, not different.

But when cricket dreamt up T20 (in which each team plays just 20 overs) batters had to reinvent batting. And as the men's three-match series between South Africa and England comes to a climax (Sunday, Sky Cricket), and the women's World Cup in Australia starts, we can look at what they've done and marvel.

In a format in which quick runs are everything and losing your wicket doesn't matter so much, batters required a new attitude – and, with it, a new range of strokes. Some commentators still refer to such strokes as "improvisation", but they're nothing of the kind. They are thought-out, relentlessly practised and represent the new orthodoxy.

The once-outrageous is now routine. You need 'Batting in the women's game has changed the most'

new shots to hit the ball to a spot where the fielders aren't, and you can get away with small errors because the sweet spot on a bat is bigger and the edges thicker. It's also a major help that the boundaries are much shorter than they used to be.

Once, a sweep shot was regarded as mildly avant-garde: now top batters can play at least four variations – orthodox, paddle, slog and reverse. The tree-felling upper-cut sends a short ball over third man for six. Perhaps the shots that best showcase the innovating spirit are those that ping the ball over the batter's own head: the scoops and ramps that turn the speed of the bowler against them.

You can combat this by placing a fielder behind the wicketkeeper – the once-obsolete long stop. But if you do that, you open up another area of the ground; the fielding captain is playing chess with pieces prone to human error. The bowler will try for a yorker, a ball that gets under the bat. The top batters respond with a helicopter shot: the bat gets under the ball instead, and, with a violent turn of the wrists, the ball is flicked into the air – good players can now hit a good yorker for six. Some batters twirl the bat a full 360 after impact – the whirling blade gives the shot its name.

Switch hits are the most thrilling of all. A right-handed batsman assumes a left-handed stance – or vice versa – after the ball has been released, and flays it into a vacant area. It's a showy shot, and is there not just for the runs but to demonstrate the batter's dominance.

Batting in the women's game has changed perhaps even more. Thirty years ago, women still played in divided skirts and most of the shots were about touch and timing. You can still see subtle shot-making from women players, but plenty of them are now also prepared to hit the ball back over the bowler's head or to slog-sweep into the stands.

The bowlers and fielders do what they can to fight back, but while the bats improve, the ball stays the same and the boundaries get shorter, the stumps remain 22 yards apart. The world is against them, but that depressing fact brings out the best from the best of them.

What would the traditionalists say? To which the best answer is: what would Don Bradman have done, had he been batting today? He'd have worn a helmet and coloured clothes and he'd have played the best switch hit you have ever seen. He'd still be looking for perfection – but perfection of a different kind.

Anya Taylor-Joy Plays emma woodhouse

"When faced with a big decision, I go back and forth a lot. I flounder and get very dramatic: 'Oh my gosh, what am I going to do? I'm going to die!' And as a young woman in this industry, people give you a lot of unsolicited advice. What I try to say is: 'I just need you to listen and I will work it out by myself.' I do that with my mum a lot. And eventually, there's a question that I always come back to: what can you live with and what can you live without?

"Whenever somebody asks me for advice, I always preface it with, 'If it's not useful to you, bin it, I don't care.' Possibly it's my Aries nature, but I can be very forthright. My best friend says to me, 'I needed to hear that, but could you be a bit gentler in future?' But I am hard on myself as well as others, if not more so. It's something that I struggle with because I have a very anxious mind. I love the characters I play very much, so I don't spend that much time being myself. A friend of mine once said, 'You would never talk to me the way you talk to yourself.' Which is true, so I'm really working at being kinder to myself."

When it comes to fulfilling your desires, is it better to follow your heart or your head? The cast of Emma reveal all

Decisions, decisions

Johnny Flynn Plays George Knightley

"I'm very good at putting decisions off. It drives my wife crazy, but I think it's very hard to make a wise knee-jerk decision. So even if I have a strong reaction to something, I'll often override that and take as much time as I can to mull over and sleep on a decision. I also use an ancient book of Chinese wisdom called The I Ching that guides you to a more profound truth in yourself. Mark Rylance is a friend of mine, and he told me he'd made some big decisions based on it. You throw three coins six times and there are 64 combinations of those throws, which correlate to a chapter in the book. I swear by it.

"I remember my teachers telling me I'd be an idiot if I tried to become an actor because it's not a proper job. Even my dad, who was an actor [Eric Flynn, who was also father to Jerome Flynn], wanted me to go to university. When I got a place at Webber Douglas drama school, he wrote me a letter saying: 'If you're serious about acting, then you'll only go to Rada,' which is where he went. I went to Webber Douglas and it was perfect for me."

Edited by ANDREW COLLINS

"The best advice I ignored? Pay your taxes. I didn't for a long time because I didn't make much money and was always moving about, so wouldn't be there when the brown envelope arrived. In the end, I surrendered to HMRC. Now I'm one of those people who quite likes paying tax.

"If I have a regret, it's that I've never really organised my life. I wish I had because you can sort out what you want, when you want it and give yourself goals. I have largely improvised throughout and followed my heart rather than my head. My head's never been that reliable. I've spent a lot of my life in a state of mild and sometimes extreme alarm, in a hostile parallel universe of my own invention, in which I was always about to get fired.

"When my daughter [Mary Nighy] decided to follow in my footsteps, I didn't advise against it, but I was vaguely discouraging. I wouldn't wish it on anybody. But then I had a day at work when I got all my laughs and I was sitting in the wings waiting to go back on, and thought, 'What are you trying to protect her from? There are all kinds of risks in anything you might do.' So I went from being gnomic to reasonably bullish. My daughter's far cleverer than I am and is an actor and a director – she's just directed a TV series called Traces."

"One of the best pieces of advice was given to me by my dad: you have to have a really solid and tender relationship with yourself, then you attract the right sort of people into your life. I trust my parents' opinion above all others. They only want the best for me. I've always been sensible and grounded in that sense.

"I can be indecisive, and that's one of the things I connected to with Harriet: the difficulty of trusting your instincts. I've recently got into meditation and that's helped a lot. Being still, and having answers come to you while in that state of mind has been powerful. I often feel like I'm going to make the wrong decision, but I've come to realise that will be a lesson in and of itself. If you just stay still, you won't grow, you'll just stagnate."

Josh O'Connor PLAYS MR ELTON

"When I was doing my GCSEs, a relative told me not to worry about them. I wish I'd taken her advice and not worried so much about not being good at anything. My dad was an English teacher and my brothers were pretty academic, but I was rubbish at school and got barely any GCSEs.

"I'm quite instinctual. I'll know my answer, but I'll seek loads of advice anyway. I'll call Mum, Dad, my brothers, my partner. When I was offered the part of Prince Charles in The Crown, I knew I wanted to play him, and I knew I didn't want to play him like he probably really is – I wanted to create a fictional character. When it comes to performance, I often go to actor friends who I really trust on character stuff. They're really good at asking the right questions."

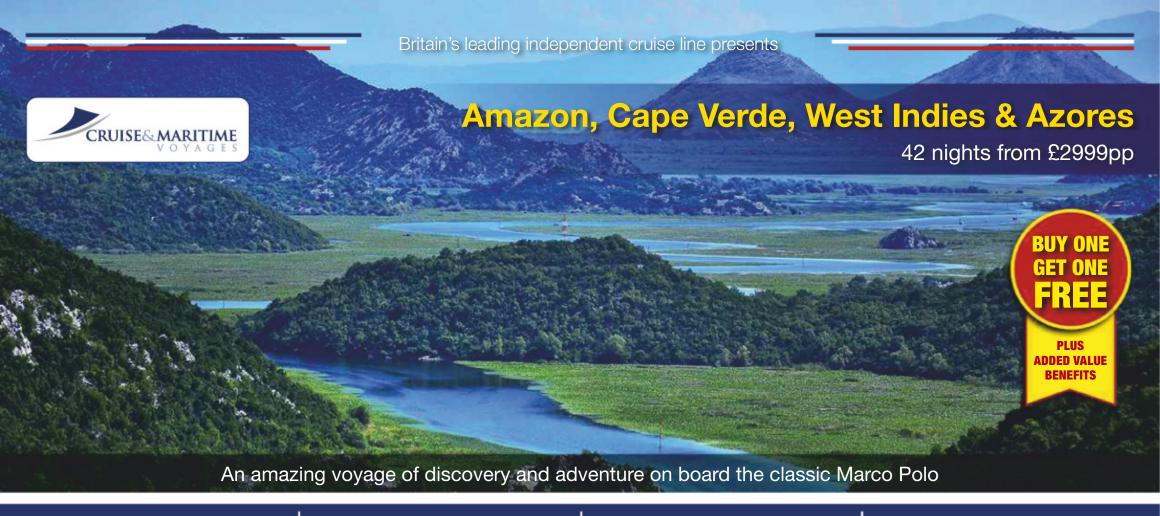

Callum Turner PLAYS FRANK CHURCHILL

"The best bit of advice I got was: dance to the rhythm of your own beat. Find out what makes you tick and only do that. Don't do what you think other people want you to. I don't like to give advice too often because it can be dangerous. I'd encourage people to try to understand themselves or their behaviour rather than give them advice - 'This is what I see in your situation. Do you see that? If you don't, maybe I'm wrong.'

"I'm very lucky – I've got a great circle of friends and we all share with each other, so there's a constant flow of advice. But I don't always go looking for answers – I allow them to come to me. If it feels right, it feels right. I don't think a decision can be right or wrong. If you enjoy that situation, then you're lucky; if you don't, you're going to learn from it." ADVENTURE In the first chapter of Peter Jackson's adaptation of JRR Tolkien's classic trilogy, mild-mannered hobbit Frodo Baggins (Elijah Wood) must turn hero when he inherits the ring of absolute power. Assisted by powerful wizard Gandalf (a perfectly cast lan McKellen) and a ragtag group of warriors and friends, Frodo must journey across mountain, forest and plain to return the talisman to its source. Only someone with a pathological aversion to fantasy could fail to be absorbed and transported by this stunning movie. AC (NZ/US 2001, may be edited for violence, HD)

COMEDY In director Michael Gordon's Doris Day classic – a remake of 1940's My Favorite Wife – the seriously correct blonde stars as a woman who returns from a desert island to find that her husband James Garner has remarried.

Providing perfect support for Day and Garner are Polly Bergen as the "other woman" and Chuck Connors as the hunk who was marooned with Day. Stealing the show, however, is the wonderful Thelma Ritter as Day's outspoken mother-in-law. Followed by Rom Coms: Talking Pictures. SH (US 1963, HD)

Jason Bourne ★★★★ 12 9.00-11.35pm C4

THRILLER Bourne is back with a vengeance as Matt Damon resumes the role that launched a game-changing franchise and influenced everything from Bond to Batman. Here, a morose Damon is under the radar earning chump-change from bare-knuckle fights on the Greek border. However, he is soon drawn to Athens for a crucial rendezvous with a fellow runaway spy (series regular Julia Stiles), who's unearthed a secret from Bourne's past. She sends our hero on a breathless, globe-spanning pursuit for the truth that climaxes on the streets of Las Vegas. JA (US 2016, violence, HD)

Rocky Balboa ★★★

10.20pm-12.15am ITV

DRAMA The sixth entry in the Rocky series finds a 60-year-old Sylvester Stallone returning to the franchise that launched his career back in 1976. Writing, directing and starring, Stallone offers an affectionate, nostalgic take on his iconic character, as Rocky is tempted out of retirement to exorcise his demons in an exhibition bout. With its hokey and sentimental story, Rocky Balboa should be risible. Yet, as Bill Conti's timeless score swells the emotions and Stallone rolls with the punches, his old warhorse proves he still has what it takes. JR (US 2006, some violence, HD)

Basic Instinct ★★★ 10.25pm-12.40am C5

EROTIC THRILLER Director Paul Verhoeven's reputation was built on his wonderful lack of taste and restraint, and these "qualities" are fully to the fore in this controversial but massively successful thriller. Sharon Stone became a sex symbol of the 1990s thanks to her cool portrayal of the predatory novelist who may or may not be a murderer, but who enjoys tormenting policeman Michael Douglas all the same. Writer Joe Eszterhas shamelessly reworks ideas and themes he had earlier exploited in films such as Jagged Edge and Music Box, but the sheer overheated nature of Verhoeven's direction makes this extremely watchable. JF (US 1992, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

\blacksquare The Salesman $\star\star\star\star$ 10.45pm-12.45am BBC4

DRAMA A crumbling apartment block foreshadows the cracks in a marriage in this Oscar-winning drama from Iranian director Asghar Farhadi (Nader and Simin, a Separation). Set in present-day Tehran, it follows a pair of amateur thespians who are starring in a production of Death of a Salesman. Emad (Shahab Hosseini) is a teacher by day, and he and wife Rana (Taraneh Alidoosti) enjoy a happy marriage until she is assaulted in their new home. Against a backdrop of frustrated creativity and censorship, Farhadi explores the relationship between art and life. His subtly probing style ultimately proves unforgiving, particularly in its portrayal of male pride. EAS (Fr/Iran/Qatar 2016, violence, HD)

Eagle Eye ★★★★

11.05pm-12.55am BBC1

THRILLER DJ Caruso and Shia LaBeouf, the director and star of Disturbia, team up again for this fast and furious conspiracy movie. In a Hitchcockian tale of ordinary people caught up in extraordinary situations, LaBeouf plays a slacker who, along with single mother Michelle Monaghan, is contacted by a female voice at the end of a phone line. The pair are framed as terrorists, and must do as the voice commands in order to survive. The film is well played, with a paranoid, 1970s sensibility, and has moments of heart-pounding suspense and impressive stunt work. It all adds up to a stylish thrill ride. Captain Fantastic ★★★ 12 midnight-1.50am BBC2

DRAMA Viggo Mortensen leads the charge in a spirited road movie about a family of social-justice warriors. Mortensen plays Ben, a radically left-wing father of six, who keeps his brood out in the wild, teaching them about art and literature but mostly survival. The death of Ben's wife is the catalyst that brings them all out of hiding and into contact with the outside world, including Ben's rich, right-wing father-in-law (Frank Langella). This bittersweet feel-good comedy doesn't hold up to very much scrutiny, but the young cast are smart and likeable, shepherded by the reliably charismatic Mortensen. DW (US 2016, swearing, HD)

Dances with Wolves

2.30-6.00pm C5

WESTERN This Oscar-hoovering 1990 epic marked actor Kevin Costner's directorial debut and recalls John Ford, Howard Hawks and Anthony Mann in their 50s and 60s pomp. Working from a script written by novelist Michael Blake, Costner casts himself as Union lieutenant John Dunbar, who begs for a transfer after an act of bravery in Tennessee. He ends up at a deserted fort where he appreciates the headspace and, cut off, communes tentatively with his Sioux neighbours. This diligently liberal update of old-school genre conventions was entirely suited to the approaching Clinton era, and Costner easily shoulders the "white man's burden" that runs in opposition to the colonial Kipling poem of the same name. Via the tribe's adopted white daughter (Mary McDonnell), Dunbar ingratiates himself and pals up with a wolf... until US Army orthodoxy shatters the peace. John Barry's romantic score is one of his best. (US 1990, edited for content, HD)

Steve Martin shines as usual, playing the Tracy role of the anxious parent who can't find a single thing to like about his daughter's perfect fiancé, while continually counting the ceremony costs. Watch for his Tom Jones impersonation: it's a scream! Diane Keaton gives him sparkling back-up as his uncomplaining wife, but it's the unbridled Martin Short who steals the entire movie in a fluffy turn as a camp wedding organiser. Showing in a double bill with the 1995 sequel. AJ (US 1991)

● Shrek the Third ★★★ 3.20-4.40pm BBC1

ANIMATION With their warm humanity, the first two Shrek movies packed a fairy-tale send-up punch, but this third outing shows signs of franchise fatigue. It struggles with a half-baked storyline in which the grumpy green ogre (voiced by Mike Myers) goes in search of a young King Arthur as heir to the throne of Far Far Away. The innovative wit of the earlier films may be lacking, yet there's still plenty here to enjoy, from Eddie Murphy and Antonio Banderas's manic double act as Donkey and Puss-in-Boots to some sly, "Once upon a time" in-jokes. But entertaining scenes of baby ogres are overshadowed by Justin Timberlake's blandly mirthless human teenager "Artie". JR (US 2007, HD)

I Was Monty's Double ★★★★ 3.35-5.15pm BBC2

WAR DRAMA The Second World War as fought on the pages of popular fiction is littered with doubles planted as decoys to divert the enemy away from a vital theatre of operation. But, as is so often the case, it is the truth that provides the best stories. This drama from director John Guillermin (who went on to helm The Towering Inferno) gains credibility not only because the title role is played by General Montgomery's double himself, ME Clifton James, but also because his autobiography has been so skilfully adapted by Bryan Forbes. The resulting film is unassuming, very slick and features a host of British stalwarts that includes John Mills, Cecil Parker and Michael Hordern. DP (UK 1958, BW, HD)

● Liar Liar * 5.15-7.00pm ITV2

COMEDY In this hilarious romp, Jim Carrey stars as ruthless lawyer and compulsive liar Fletcher Reede, who misses his son's birthday party and is "cursed" to tell the truth for 24 hours. Carrey's frenzied physical and vocal contortions provide lots of amusing comic moments (as well as a few riotous ones), and the role is not only tailormade for his rubber-faced antics but also gives him an opportunity to show a more human side. His bravura performance is reminiscent of Steve Martin's body battle in All of Me, as he hurls inadvertent insults and digs himself into an abyss in the middle of a big divorce case. JC (US 1997, may be edited for content, HD)

Runaway Bride ★★★ 6.40-9.00pm Sony Movies

ROMANTIC COMEDY Julia Roberts, Richard Gere and their Pretty Woman director Garry Marshall were reunited for this predictable but well-played rom-com. Roberts stars as the smalltown girl who has left three heartbroken men at the altar, and Gere plays the columnist who's keen to see if she will tie the knot on her fourth attempt. Of course, you'll have worked out the ending before you reach the last line of this review. However, thanks to Roberts's deft comedic touch, a zippy script and some nice support from Joan Cusack, this is a sweet romance that will warm the cockles of wedding fanatics everywhere. JB (US 1999, swearing)

The Martian $\star\star\star\star$ 9.00-11.50pm E4

SCI-FI An Oscar-nominated Matt Damon is the astronaut left for dead on the Red Planet in this adaptation of Andy Weir's novel. There are surprisingly few dark moments in a survival story that won a Golden Globe in the best comedy or musical category, with our hero cheerfully setting his mind to growing potatoes while communicating with Nasa (represented by Jeff Daniels, Kristen Wiig and Chiwetel Ejiofor). The use of "real science" adds a fascinating dimension to the story and, while director Ridley Scott never uses the epic landscape to convey a more profound feeling of isolation, Damon is great company in the most dire of circumstances. SP (US 2015, swearing, HD)

ROMANTIC COMEDY Sandra Bullock is a big-shot editor at a New York publishing company who, in order to avoid deportation to her native Canada, pressures her assistant (Ryan Reynolds) into marrying her. Before that, though, she has to spend the weekend in Alaska with his family. Bullock and Reynolds share real chemistry, while Betty White (TV's Golden Girls) shines as the matriarch who thinks marriage is just peachy. Nicely directed by Anne Fletcher (27 Dresses), the movie sometimes comes close to the screwball romantic comedies of old. KK (US 2009, swearing, HD)

ANDREW COLLINS FILM OF THE DAY

Gone Girl ★★★★

9.00-11.55pm Film4

MYSTERY Journalist-turned-novelist Gillian Flynn's third novel concerns a husband who falls under suspicion when his wife disappears. The book became an instant bestseller, and was adapted for the screen by gloom-meister David Fincher (Se7en). Ben Affleck plays the teacher whose wife Rosamund Pike goes missing on their fifth wedding anniversary, putting him under police scrutiny, while his failure to behave like the grieving husband for the media does him no favours. Kim Dickens, Carrie Coon, Neil Patrick Harris and Tyler Perry round out the cast, but it's the desaturated mood and the narrative twists that will stay with you. Millions read the book, but if you haven't, you'll enjoy the film all the more. (US 2014, violence, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

WAR DRAMA Gary Cooper and Ingrid Bergman turn Ernest Hemingway's classic story set during the Spanish Civil War into a star vehicle made for two. while director Sam Wood scrubs the tale clean of political taint (there's no mention of Franco, for example). Cooper plays an American member of a loyalist partisan group who falls for Bergman while on a mission to blow up a bridge. However, it was Katina Paxinou's performance as a strong-willed guerrilla fighter that won the Oscar. TH (US 1943)

Bad Neighbours 2 ★★★★ 9.00-11.00pm E4

COMEDY Far from preaching to the converted, this sequel winningly subverts the traditional college comedy while remaining authentically ribald. It's also a surprisingly feminist film that takes on sexism and has a ball doing so. With 30 days before the sale of their house can go through, Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne are once again at the mercy of teenage neighbours, this time in the shape of a rule-breaking sorority led by Chloë Grace Moretz, who teams up with the couple's old nemesis, Zac Efron, before he switches sides. Moving at a fair old lick, Bad Neighbours 2 feels fresh and even incendiary, as in-your-face hedonism and hilarity become a force for good. EAS (US 2016, swearing, drug abuse, HD)

The Matrix Reloaded ★★★ 9.30pm-12 midnight Sky1

SCI-FI THRILLER Creating a sequel to the superlative sci-fi blockbuster The Matrix was always going to be a Herculean task. To their credit, director siblings the Wachowskis succeed in equalling the original's awe factor, as Neo (Keanu Reeves) and his associates fight to save Zion, Earth's last human enclave. There's a handful of fantastic - though underused - new villains and an array of astonishing set pieces. Disappointingly, however, such elements fail to lift a film that suffers from stilted dialogue, cheesy scripting and a surprisingly plodding pace. SF (US/Aus 2002, violence)

WAR DRAMA Writer/director David Aver's heart-pounding movie sees a tank, commanded by Brad Pitt, rolling through Germany in the brutal dying days of the Second World War. But it's through the eyes of a replacement driver (Percy Jackson star Logan Lerman) that the reality of conflict hits home. There are no bad guys, only men running on adrenaline and working under extreme pressure. Even the Nazis seem tragic, with only pride left to fight for. While there are archetypes and Hollywoodisms, Ayer probes for what makes a man beneath the brutality and the bluster. SP (US 2014, violence, swearing, HD)

DOCUMENTARY In the years leading up to his tragic death at the San Marino Grand Prix in 1994, Ayrton Senna established himself as one of Formula One's most brilliant, daring and controversial drivers. Director Asif Kapadia's engrossing movie, assembled from archive footage with voiceovers from leading F1 figures, paints a portrait of a determined, deeply spiritual man. His clashes on and off the track with rival Alain Prost give the chronological telling of the story added bite, resulting in a biopic that will appeal to more than fans of fast cars. TeS (UK 2010, swearing, HD)

■ My Cousin Rachel ★★★ 9.00-11.10pm Film4

ROMANTIC MYSTERY This second big-screen adaptation of Daphne du Maurier's Cornish-set novel is a kind of reverse Rebecca. It's the story of three cousins: the titular, half-Italian widow (played by Rachel Weisz); dashing orphan Philip (Sam Claflin); and his wealthy guardian Ambrose (who is spoken of but never seen). When Ambrose visits Rachel in Florence, news reaches Philip that he has fallen ill, and so Philip sets off for Italy, where he discovers Ambrose is dead. Did Rachel have a hand in his demise? Claflin is a joy here, but he's forced by tradition to take off his shirt, revealing a 21st-century bodybuilder's shoulders. Still, Poldark fans will enjoy the fabulous Devon locations, the costume design and cinematography, and Du Maurier has again been done proud. (US/UK 2017, swearing, HD)

COMEDY Russell Brand reprises his role from Forgetting Sarah Marshall here, only this time he's hogging the limelight as impish rock star Aldous Snow. Jonah Hill is typically hangdog as the recordcompany drone charged with getting Aldous to the Greek Theatre in LA for his big comeback gig. FILM OF THE DAY

The Outlaw Josey Wales ★★★★ 9.00-11.50pm ITV4 18

WESTERN Clint Eastwood seized the directorial reins from Phil Kaufman and fashioned this tough, sprawling post-Civil War epic into something approaching a personal testament. The tale of a wronged farmer bent on revenge consists more of a series of vignettes and lacks the tightness of structure that so distinguishes the director's later Unforgiven, but there's much strength and power to be derived from the iconographic value of Eastwood the star. Dante's Peak ★★★ 6.55-9.00pm Film4

DISASTER MOVIE Pierce Brosnan's vulcanologist sees the warning signs for major lava problems in a mountainside town, but no one believes him in this typically special effects-driven 1990s disaster flick. Director Roger Donaldson handles things in the same way he did in Species, papering over dialogue and character deficiencies with some exciting set pieces. Meanwhile, Brosnan and Linda Hamilton offer serviceable performances, but they're battling against more than just the elements. JC (US 1997, swearing, HD)

Torn Curtain ★★★ 9.00-11.45pm Sony Classic

SPY THRILLER If not a key Alfred Hitchcock film, this at least contains one of his most compelling sequences. "I wanted to show how difficult it is to kill someone," Hitch said, and in a prolonged scene here involving Paul Newman, played without dialogue, he certainly does. Newman is the alleged American defector, and Julie Andrews his concerned wife, in a Cold War tale that's very much of its time. There's not a jot of chemistry between the stars, but Hitchcock fans won't mind. Showing in a double bill with the director's Jamaica Inn. TS (US 1966, violence)

Introducing the NEW cordless

GLIDE

Multi-surface hard floor cleaner that kills 99.9% of bacteria*

Revolutionary Technology

Why does cleaning your hard floors have to be such hard work? Sweeping, scrubbing and mopping – even if it looks clean, invisible bacteria could just be getting spread around. The new VAX ONEPWR Glide is a cordless hard floor cleaner that makes cleaning effortless because it vacuums, washes and dries at the same time, killing 99.9% of bacteria*. Powered by the new VAX ONEPWR battery it delivers constant powerful cleaning performance and can be used across all sealed hard floors.

Save Time

Let the VAX Glide do all the hard work for you. The powerful, advanced multi-surface brushroll gently washes your hard floors while scrubbing to loosen dirt and debris. A trigger on the handle allows you to decide how much solution and water is used and for extra cleaning power, you can switch to high mode to tackle those tougher jobs such as dried in stains or muddy paw prints. Additional features include steerable technology and DirtTracker LED headlights that give you effortless manoeuvrability around the home and leaves nowhere for the dirt to hide.

Easy to Use

With the VAX ONEPWR Glide, there's no more spreading dirty water around your home with a mop and bucket or floor wipe. Instead, Glide uses twin-tank technology meaning only VAX solution and clean water is applied to the floor and the dirt and bacteria lifted away is collected in its dirty water tank. The tank is simply lifted out and the dirty water can be poured away. Plus, once you've finished washing your hard floors, the auto clean system rinses the machine mess free - meaning the VAX ONEPWR Glide really does do all the hard work for you.

Cordless Convenience

The freestanding cordless VAX Glide can be stored away neatly and at just 4.9kg, it's lightweight and easy to use around the whole home. Edited by ALISON GRAHAM

Must do better

I'm starting a TV Watching School, says Alison Graham

ooray for comedian Rob Delaney, who told RT last week that television should not be watched on tiny screens. "That's ∟ a sin. I'd rather people didn't watch what I made than watch on a smartphone." I stood up and cheered when I read that. And I shattered glass with my whoops of delight when he went on: "Your phone should be locked away when you are watching TV. You shouldn't be texting or tweeting... those are bad people and they need to go to TV watching school."

Oh, I'd love to be headteacher at TV Watching School. Everyone would have to arrive on time, of course. There would be a uniform, nothing fancy, a T-shirt and roomy jogging bottoms, with furry slippers an optional extra. There'd be cushions, too. I'm not a monster.

School dinners would consist, all day and every day, of cheese toasties (you can still watch telly as they frazzle) and everyone would have to present a diary of what they had watched the day before. And I mean watched, not had on in the background as they cleaned the kitchen taps with a toothbrush.

I would also run brutal sessions for people who watch television on their phones on trains. This has to stop, for the good of their souls. It's like watching telly through a letterbox with your fingers in your ears.

Some kind of aversion therapy is called for, or perhaps a reward system. If you resist the temptation to stream Line of Duty on your phone during a train journey, you could have two packets of those free biscuits that are handed out on trains, the ones that taste of sweet dust.

Besides, I'm old-fashioned enough to believe that the only allowable form of time-passing entertainment on trains is reading, or gazing out of the window, or possibly, just possibly, talking to a nice fellow passenger.

Why divert your attention to peer at a teenytiny screen as you wear teeny-tiny headphones watching a teeny-tiny format? Where's the joy, where's the majesty of television? Both vanish when the pictures and sound are shrunk to a size that would work only as an IMAX for guinea pigs.

I make long journeys by train fairly frequently and would love to prod hapless fellow passengers as they giggle at some rubbish comedy on their phones and draw their attention to other wonders. "Look, you fool, we are travelling through the Stroud Valley, it's beautiful... Oooh, we're coming into Bath, look at those magnificent Regency terraces... Oooh, we're on the approach to Swindon station, look at the long, miserable, drafty platforms." (Er, OK, I'll give them that one.)

Save the telly for when you can watch properly, dear fellow passenger, on a big screen with proper sound. People have worked hard to bring you that experience, indulge them, why don't you?

As for the tweeters and the texters... Delaney is right again. Who hasn't settled down to watch telly with a loved one, or even an unloved one, only to find their, and by extension your, attention, is focused on their phone. It's infuriating. You might be being very quiet but I KNOW that you aren't sharing this particular experience. At TV Watching School this would be Lesson One. Now line up in the playground before I get cross.

DANGER, WHAT DANGER?

I think we have reached peak "jeopardy" in TV documentaries, particularly soft-docs such as The Yorkshire Steam Railway: All Aboard, a nice, leisurely series that returns to Channel 5 on Friday.

Nothing is really in jeopardy, but producers, presumably terrified of losing viewers they think want to be in a constant state of brittle excitement, load the narration with a refined sense of doom.

In Yorkshire Steam Railway a train gets stuck in a station for a few minutes. It's really no big deal, but oh, the tension. Will it move? Won't it move? Honestly, it doesn't matter, it's North Yorkshire, it's beautiful, relax everyone and have an ice cream.

The Heist

Available now

A reality game show that follows on from C4's Hunted, replacing the concept of ordinary folk trying to hide from surveillance professionals with something slightly different: a contrived robbery leaves the fake fugitives with a large stash of cash, and it's the money they have to conceal. The principle is the same though – keeping one's common sense intact is the key.

Work in Progress

Available from 12 February

Abby McEnany makes a fine dramedy debut playing screen alter ego and "fat, queer dyke" Abby – whose life in Chicago is blighted by mental health problems until a new relationship with a younger trans man offers fresh hope. Unfamiliar as some scenarios might be, the bones of the show are the classic comedy staples of neurosis, embarrassment and self-analysis.

The New Pope

Available now

Italian director Paolo Sorrentino returns with a sequel to The Young Pope (which is also available via NowTV/Sky Box Sets): obviously there's a different pontiff, in the august shape of John Malkovich instead of Jude Law, but the show's qualities are the same. It's sumptuous to look at, hard to predict and never dull.

NETFLIX

Who Killed Malcolm X?

Available now

A documentary series about the 1965 shooting of radical civil rights leader Malcolm X. As well as telling the story, complete with first-hand testimonies and rediscovered archive footage, the programme follows academic Abdur-Rahman Muhammad as he re-opens the case, to find that the intrigue spreads wider than the killing itself.

PREPARE TO CRINGE... Love is Blind

Available from 13 February

Dating on TV reaches a potential new high, or low, with this bold format-mashing monster. Singletons go on blind dates (literally, because they can't see each other), before choosing a partner, getting engaged and then finally meeting, to see if there's a spark in person and also to plan a wedding. Doing things in that order... doesn't always work.

INTRIGUING SCI-FI Omniscient

Available now

New from Brazil, a drama with a nice dystopian premise: a young woman (Carla Salle, below) finds her father dead in a pool of blood, only to be told by the authorities that he can't have been murdered – because this is a future society where citizens' every movement is tracked by drones, with crimes detected automatically. Of course, there's a conspiracy to crack.

WHAT'S NEW ON IPLAYER, NETFLIX, AMAZON AND BEYOND

BBC iPLAYER

The Split

Series 2 available from 11 February
This potboiler-with-class, starring Nicola Walker as a divorce lawyer with a complex personal life, is trashy, but it has enough quality about it that you won't feel bilious if you wolf it down. All of the second series will be available on iPlayer straight after the first episode airs on 11 February, and if its web of secrets and betrayals is new to you, series one is also available to stream.

Shock of the Nude

Available now

Mary Beard pitches this two-parter perfectly. She's certainly not blind to the comical elements in a study of nudes in Western art, but as well as peering at marble balls and having a crack at life drawing, she's a keen observer of how nudes have reflected changing attitude to gender – and some uncomfortable discussions about what kind of human body it's acceptable to look at, and when.

ALL 4

A COMEDY CLASSIC Seinfeld

Available now

Last year, Netflix paid hundreds of millions of dollars for the global streaming rights to Seinfeld, one of the great US sitcoms – but that deal doesn't take effect until 2021, and in the meantime All 4 has nipped in. On 7 February it uploaded the first three series (which are by far the weakest), and it'll add one more every Friday until the whole box set is there. Re-watch it and you'll see how influential Seinfeld has been.

The Truth Will Out

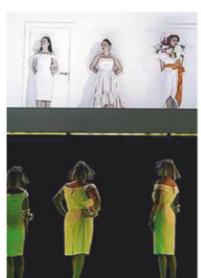

Available now

It looks initially like a standard Scandi crime drama, albeit a nicely made one full of coldly handsome shots of Stockholm, but this Swedish series is prepared to play with expectations. Robert Gustafsson (above, second left), much better known for comedy, is a weary detective with a bleak personal life whose efforts to build a cold case team are hindered by his bosses making him work with a hilarious gang of incompetents.

SATURDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Hidden 9.00pm BBC4

DRAMA Two police officers gingerly work their way through a remote, pitch-dark house as water drips ominously through the ceiling. There is, of course, something nasty in the bathroom: the body of a retired schoolteacher. He's been savagely beaten to death.

A panicked and distressed anonymous 999 call has alerted police to the crime, so it's clear that someone involved in the attack has a conscience. But why pick on this particular victim, who lived a reclusive and apparently blameless life? It's up to the splendid, newly promoted Detective Chief Inspector Cadi John (Sian Reese-Williams) to find out, as the second series of the superior Welsh noir thriller begins (Hidden started on BBC Wales last week). She's an excellent heroine – cool without being cold, unflappable, clever and thorough.

As the grey mountains of Snowdonia look down and the mist swirls around the valleys, Cadi picks apart an unhappy life. ALISON GRAHAM TV EDITOR

The Greatest Dancer

6.45pm BBC1

ENTERTAINMENT Oh, to be a fly on the wall in the weekly meeting where the bigwigs come up with the "Challenge Themes". What on earth goes on in there? Week one of the live shows saw the contestants dancing to themes that sort of made sense: Shakespeare, Pantomime, the 6Os. But then there were other more perplexing themes of Telephone Box, House of Commons and, perhaps most bizarrely, Queuing. Eh?

The performances themselves from the eight remaining acts will no doubt be incredibly strong, although it says something that the most memorable moment of the live shows so far has been Diversity performing with the presenters and dance captains. FRANCES TAYLOR

The Masked Singer

entertainment What an unexpected treat this has been. After getting over the initial bafflement of watching an oversized duck, steampunk hedgehog and fluffy blue monster belting out tunes, The Masked Singer has wormed its way to becoming one of the most enjoyable and talked-about new entertainment shows. It's also been a pleasant surprise that the unmasked celebs haven't been unrecognisable reality TV "stars", but in fact accomplished recording artists.

Tonight's grand final will see one crazy critter named as the first ever winner. With a couple of tweaks to the format, ITV would be daft not to bring this back for an even bigger and better second series. FT

Digging up Britain's Past

7.00pm Channel 5

HISTORY If you were a Tudor landowner, a visit from royalty was dreaded as much as it was anticipated. Just imagine how Lord Chandos, the owner of Sudeley Castle in the Cotswolds, must have felt when, in 1592, he learnt that Elizabeth I was coming to stay for a three-day party to celebrate her victory over the Spanish Armada. A hog roast just wouldn't be enough; it was decided to create a new garden, complete with fountain and banqueting house.

Alex Langlands joins a team of archaeologists trying to find it, while Raksha Dave travels to Kenilworth Castle to discover the true price of hosting a monarch (and their court).

GILL CRAWFORD

The Voice UK

8.30pm ITV

entertainment Seven weeks of Blind Auditions culminate this evening with the final hopefuls stepping up in the hope that Olly Murs, Sir Tom Jones, Meghan Trainor or Will.i.am will give them a chair turn. By the end of the show, we'll have the full line-up of 40 acts confirmed. For the singers, the atmosphere on the final day has to be tough – the opportunities for a spot are scant and the coaches will be extra critical of what they're listening out for.

The Battle rounds start next week but it is at this point, inevitably, that the novelty factor of the show wears off a bit and it reverts to being a more run-of-the-mill singing competition. FT

SATURDAY 15 FEBRUARY

TV I MISS...

"People often use the word 'gritty' to describe a show, but with Deadwood you can really taste the grit.

Everyone in it is so filthy, you can almost smell them," says Amanda Mealing, star of Casualty (9.10pm BBC1). "It's the perfect TV drama. Every aspect of it is brilliant: the writing, the sets and the kaleidoscope of characters. I know that the language is foul. And seeing Ian McShane [far left] come out with so much profanity is initially shocking. But it's so true to the time in which it's set and he's so good that you forget it's him and he just becomes Al Swearengen. My husband and I saw all three series when they came out, but we revisited them before the 2019 movie.

"It's definitely a series that was cancelled far too early. There are so many layers to each character's story that you could easily have kept going with it." DAVID BROWN

Secrets in the Sky Casualty

9.00pm History

HISTORY If you like high-altitude espionage, you'll enjoy this flight into the story of top-secret US aeronautics organisation Skunk Works.

Footage of Area 51 in the 1950s gives a sense of the dusty, scorching Nevada plains where engineers used pencils and slide rules to design the U2 spy plane. But the doc really jets into life when the Lockheed Blackbird hits the air. Made using titanium the CIA bought under cover from Russia, the design is so outside-the-box it's no wonder people thought it was alien technology.

There's a sense of satisfaction at getting the inside story on something that was once so highly classified. Unless, of course, you prefer the conspiracies. GARY ROSE DRAMA Casualty may as well have called this a Sick Kids Special. One youngster collapses in the kitchen as his distracted dad takes a video conference call in another room. And in a storyline with longer-term repercussions, Ruby's wayward sister Violette is left fearing for the welfare of her baby daughter Harmony after discovering that she has a worrying rash.

But there is some soapy docs-atloggerheads drama, too. Ethan is back from his travels and comes face to face with Rash who, lest we forget, punched him in the face the last time they were in each other's company. Will there be fresh aggro for the warring pair? Or can they forgive and forget? DAVID BROWN

Snowfall

10.30pm, 11.15pm BBC2

DRAMA Like many American dramas, Snowfall likes to blind us with storylines. It shifts between characters and locales to map out a rich world that feels as if it spreads beyond the edges of what we see on screen. All of which is great – it's what makes the show absorbing. But this season feels as though it is boiling down to one central conflict: Franklin Saint versus Sergeant Andre Wright.

"You and me, we at war," the strait-laced cop warned Franklin, and he fired the first shots last week. But in the aftermath of the raids, Franklin finds a way to hit back. Meanwhile, Melody (Andre's daughter and Franklin's ex) is preparing to escape South Central LA. But can she? DAVID BUTCHER

Athletics: Glasgow

Indoor Grand Prix 1.15pm BBC1

SPORT The Olympic Games are just 160 days away, and Britain's track and field stars enter the final straight to Tokyo at Glasgow's Indoor Grand Prix.

A stellar line-up for the Emirates Arena is headlined by Katarina Johnson-Thompson, who confirmed her status as the poster girl of British athletics with her gold at the World Championships. The heptathlete, who finished a frustrated sixth in Rio four years ago, begins her bid for Olympic glory today in the long jump. But the highlight for the home crowd should be an attempt on the 1,000m indoor record by Scottish powerhouse Laura Muir, who won two European gold medals on this track 12 months ago.

It's not all about the Brits, though: the start list for the women's 60m sprint looks particularly strong, pitting outdoor world 100m champion Shelly-Ann Fraser-Pryce of Jamaica against indoor 60m world champion Murielle Ahoure of Ivory Coast. CHRIS HUGHES

9.00pm Sky Premiere

The technology may be cutting edge, but the tone of this film calls to mind the post-Watergate paranoia of Three Days of the Condor. Jesse Eisenberg plays the Wall Street drone who co-opts the help of his computer-whizz cousin Alexander Skarsgård to invent a hi-tech gizmo that allows them to steal a march on the financial competition. But their ex-boss Salma Hayek is on to them. The performances are a tad broad, but this tense drama keeps you watching. DAVID PARKINSON

Family ups and downs

Lady Bird Metflix

This Oscar-nominated comedy drama from Little Women writer/director Greta Gerwig is now on Netflix. "I have to get out of Sacramento," groans capricious teen Christine McPherson (Saoirse Ronan), who goes by the flamboyant name "Lady Bird", much to the chagrin of her mother (Laurie Metcalf). Ronan and Metcalf inhabit their flawed characters so beautifully that you'll weep for every botched effort at bonding and reconciliation, but desperately hope that their love will withstand the blows. EMMA SIMMONDS

For the next week, Sky Sci-Fi/Horror becomes Sky Star Wars, showing the first six films in the series – from Phantom Menace to Return of the Jedi – plus origins tale Solo and animated adventure The Clone Wars. SUNDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY The Pale Horse 9.00pm BBC1 (N Ireland: BBC2)

DRAMA OF THE WEEK Ah, Sarah Phelps, you are a clever woman, taking one of Agatha Christie's oddest mysteries and tipping it upside down to make it even more off-kilter, unsettling and enthralling.

In the final episode, antiques dealer Mark Easterbrook (Rufus Sewell, never better) is a lost soul, grieving for his first wife while despising his second, Hermia – played by Kaya Scodelario, who is excellent as a bored, unhappy woman gasping from suffocating social mores.

Mark must find a way of breaking the curse of the three witches as they brew up trouble in the living room of the Pale Horse in Much Deeping.

But how? The story spins and pivots in wild directions, buffeting between pagan rituals and folk stories while ending with a sinister, deeply creepy flourish. The Pale Horse is up there with And Then There Were None as one of the best, most troubling, of Phelps's Christie adaptations.

Doctor Who

prama A few weeks after running into mathematician Ada Lovelace, the Doctor and company catch up with her dad, Lord Byron, on an auspicious date – the night in 1816 when some literary luminaries tell ghost stories in the Villa Diodati, which will inspire the creation of a certain ground-breaking novel by Mary Shelley...

"Nobody mention Frankenstein.
Nobody interfere. Nobody snog Byron," the Doctor instructs as the Tardis touches down at Lake Geneva
– but they don't have long to soak up the atmosphere before a deadly, horror-themed threat arrives.

The Doctor is faced with a very difficult decision – will she make the right choice? HUW FULLERTON

Call the Midwife

8.00pm BBC1

DRAMA Nice, overworked Dr Turner takes an almost paternal pride in junior doctor Dr McNulty, who is terribly keen to learn all about delivering babies and is thoughtful when talking to his patients.

But beneath his charming exterior, young Dr McNulty harbours a secret pain, one that can be relieved only by pinching from the surgery's supplies of controlled drugs. Soon his bad habits lead to a near-disaster witnessed by Sister Frances.

Meanwhile, Trixie helps a young, pregnant blind woman who is fiercely independent and insists on caring for herself. But social services cast a long shadow and even the woman's sister thinks the baby should be taken into care. AG distressing aspect to the second episode in this brief series, which ends next week, and that's the appalling array of 1970s tank tops. Did we really dress like that?

Endeavour

Even Ludo, that wealthy, creepy Italian gent who appears to have wafted in from a Fellini movie, wears one. He turns up on Morse's doorstep once again with a dinner invitation. What's his game?

At work Fred patrols that grim canal towpath on the lookout for the phantom whistler, convinced the cops got the wrong man for the murder of a young woman. And violent racism rears its ugly head in general election week, with the arrival of a fascist demagogue. AG

My Family and the Galapagos

8.00pm C4

pocumentary "Mangroves are wonderful places to bring little people because they're essentially a nursery where animals grow up," says Monty Halls. So young Molly gets to swim alongside a baby sea lion while big sister Isla helps out on a shark monitoring expedition, enthusiastically tagging the youngsters. Meanwhile, her mum and dad scuba-dive in an area called the washing machine because of the turbulent currents.

But power cuts, lack of drinking water and grocery shortages means life on the Galapagos isn't idyllic. "It's easy to love this island, but it's not so easy to live on this island," says Monty. JANE RACKHAM

BRISTOL ON SCREEN

The Pale Horse (9pm BBC1: N Ireland: BBC2) is among several recent TV dramas to have used Bristol as a stand-in for London. Mammoth Screen considers it to be a "home away from home", says line producer Benjamin Greenacre, with Poldark having been based at Bristol's Bottle Yard Studios for five years. Now, the production company has recast Queen Square as apartments in Chelsea for the Agatha Christie whodunnit, while the neo-gothic Wills Memorial Building doubled as the House of Commons in The Trial of Christine Keeler (left).

Sherlock regularly used the city (the first memorable confrontation with Moriarty was at Bristol South Swimming Baths). In the 2012 Doctor Who Christmas special, Portland Square became Victorian London. And that famous Only Fools and Horses scene that saw Del falling through the bar? It was shot in the cellar of what's now a seafood restaurant in Welsh Back. DAVID BROWN

Win the Wilderness: Alaska

9.00pm BBC2 (N Ireland: 10.30pm; Wales 11.00pm)

REALITY To win the last place on the shortlist, three couples have their survival instincts tested by spending a night in the wilderness. Much is made of the fact that the area is renowned for bears and wolves but, aside from a paw print, they see nothing scarier than mosquitos.

So their main challenge is building an overnight shelter from the surrounding branches and foliage, but they all wake up smiling, which is an achievement in itself.

Meanwhile, the others pan for gold – if they find some, maybe they could buy their own homestead instead of taking on Duane and Rena's place. JR

Art on the BBC

9.00pm BBC4

ART Michelangelo is an undisputed colossus of the Italian Renaissance, as a sculptor, painter and architect. But as well as his artistic triumphs, his contradictions are equally well documented; his arrogance, his violent feuds with other artists. his appalling personal hygiene...

In Michelangelo: the Good, the Bad and the Ugly, art historian Sona Datta walks us through his life and work as seen on TV over the past 60 years. There's no shortage of hyperbole as an array of po-faced gentlemen try to explain his genius to a television audience – some more successfully than others – and plenty of florid historical dramatisations. Modern experts put these into context, and explode some myths. GILL CRAWFORD

DRAMA Previously, on Homeland: poor, put-upon Carrie Mathison – wild of hair and eye – was handed over after seven months in a Russian gulag without her meds. And long-standing fans of the show knew exactly what that meant. She ran straight past her mentor Saul Berenson, who was a stranger to her.

That axis of trust and friendship about which all the action has revolved is what has made this slick counterterrorist thriller so watchable for seven series, even when the plots have thumbed their nose at credibility. And the leads are astonishingly good: Mandy Patinkin as the gruff, gnomic security adviser Saul and Claire Danes as Carrie, pulled in all directions like a svelte Stretch Armstrong.

So the scene is well set for the eighth and final series, with a new president in the White House, and Saul in charge of peace talks with the Taliban. Can he persuade Carrie to accompany him on one final mission?

Joaquin before Joker You Were Never Really Here  All4 FREE TO VIEW

Lynne Ramsay's brutal, unconventional thriller is the kind of film that avoids clichés at every turn. Recent Bafta winner Joaquin Phoenix is excellent as the suicidal killer hired to rescue a teenager (Ekaterina Samsonov) from an upscale brothel. Although confusing and vague at times, the film is also intense and unsettling, offering an alternative for viewers tired of standard genre fare. Available on C4's catch-up platform until 12 March. STEPHEN CARTY

New on Netflix today

Proud Mary ★★★ Netflix

This dour action thriller has a serious selling point in its star Taraji P Henson (Hidden Figures). She plays a hitwoman who mows down some gang members while protecting a boy she's inadvertently orphaned, triggering a war between her boss (Danny Glover) and a rival crime lord. Henson puts in a multifaceted performance that sees her pivot between sass, steel and maternal concern. If the film lacks flavour as a whole, the bond between Henson and her young charge is genuinely touching. EMMA SIMMONDS

Twice as awesome!

The Lego Movie 1 & 2 ★★★★ from 4.20pm Sky Animation

A highlight on Sky's new all-animation pop-up channel today is a double bill of colourful fun in the form of the first two Lego Movies. Chris Pratt is a hoot as the voice of Emmet, a cheerful but clueless construction worker who is as perplexed as everyone else after a prophecy identifies him as "The Special". ELLIE PORTER

MONDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY This Country 7.00pm BBC3, iPlayer, 10.35pm BBC1 (N Ireland: 11.35pm)

COMEDY OF THE WEEK The first episode in the third and, sadly, final series of Daisy May and Charlie Cooper's clever, warm and beautifully observed mock-documentary focusing on a couple of bored cousins in a Cotswold town, begins on a sad note. Actor Michael Sleggs, who played gormless "Slugs", the hapless, much-derided friend of Kurtan and Kerry Mucklowe, died last year.

In a funny and tender way, writers/creators the Coopers mark this with the loss of Slugs in the show, just after he'd asked them if they wanted to join a group in "a zombie escape room in Swindon".

But Slugs reaches out from the great beyond with a letter for Kurtan, which shakes him to his core. Meanwhile Kerry has a job at a recycling centre, which she uses to help herself to items destined for the charity shop with the unerring logic: "Why go Christmas shopping when the dump is my John Lewis?" New Zealand: Earth's Mythical Islands mature Clouds of geo-thermal midges dance above the steaming waters of a stream too hot for fish to swim in; just-hatched tuatara, reptiles dating back to the dinosaurs, lurk in the mossy undergrowth; and pohutukawa trees, smothered in crimson flowers, explode out of barren volcanic wasteland. You can see why New Zealand is so popular with film-makers looking for "otherworldly" locations.

There are charming sights too in this 2018 documentary: hundreds of penguins waddle through prehistoric woodlands while pods of dusky dolphins leap and spin through the sea – not just for fun but as a means of communication. JANE RACKHAM

Only Connect

quiz Only Connect fans can continue to re-live those halcyon days of December 2019 here as, for the second consecutive episode, a quarter-final clash features two teams who have played each other before. Last time around, the Choristers beat the Forrests by a single point, and it's not too much of a spoiler to say this is another terrifically tight contest with a closing missing-vowels round so tense, you might snap a biscuit.

Before that are some enjoyably annoying questions featuring Nora Ephron, Brian Clough and Billie Jean King, plus Victoria Coren Mitchell's fleeting, but still haunting, impersonation of Mariah Carey in her prime. JACK SEALE

Cold Feet

9.00pm ITV

DRAMA Robert Bathurst (who plays David) has already expressed his fears that this will be it for Cold Feet, telling us: "It's not my decision, but if we are finishing, I hope we've given ITV a very difficult decision to make. It could well be the end."

The last episode of this latest run was still being edited at the time of writing, so I can't say whether there is an air of finality to it. What we do know, though, is that Adam and Karen will face a big dilemma, while Jen is heading to hospital for a mammogram – the first since her cancer treatment.

Please let there not be any emotional upset. If this truly is the end, we deserve an upbeat send-off. DAVID BROWN

Prison

9.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY One inmate at HMP Foston Hall in Derbyshire describes it as a "big girls' school, St Trinian's on crack". She's laughing, but she's not far wrong. Drugs are omnipresent, says a prison officer. "Ninety per cent [of inmates] come in with drugs in places we're not allowed to search... lady parts," he adds, delicately.

This excellent documentary takes us into the chaotic and noisy First Night Unit, where every new arrival must spend time. It's a hotbed of gossip, fury and furtive drug-taking. Prison officers are empathetic and try to help women whose problems when they arrive, including suffering sexual abuse, domestic violence and mental illness, can seem overwhelming. AG

MONDAY 17 FEBRUARY

The undulating curves of the Thames have featured in the opening, aerial shot of every episode of EastEnders (8.00pm BBC1). And now, for the show's 35th anniversary, we're setting sail on the river itself for this much-talkedabout boat party stunt.

As with the recent "Who Killed Graham?" mystery on Emmerdale, each of the week's episodes will take place on the same day, but from the perspective of different characters (tonight, it's the newly divorced Mick and Linda). The cliffhangers will be the same moment of disaster, but it's only on Friday that we'll witness its immediate aftermath. However you may feel about this trend for narrative trickery and the stresstesting of the usually naturalistic soap format, there are bound to be moments of high excitement.

And in a neat tribute of which I heartily approve, the vessel itself is called the Smith-Holland – a nod to EastEnders creators Julia Smith and Tony Holland. DAVID BROWN

Inside No 9

10.00pm BBC2 (N Ireland: Wed 11.15pm BBC2)

ANTHOLOGY Steve Pemberton and Reece Shearsmith eschew No 9's dark comedy and chills to explore new territory in Love's Great Adventure, which unfolds like a low-key episode of a family drama. Debbie Rush plays cash-strapped Jules (not a million cobbles away from her Corrie character Anna Windass), who's facing a tight Christmas with her hubby Trev (Pemberton), daughter Mia and grandson Connor.

We follow the Morburys through December as the opening of an Advent calendar gives windows into their life. A beautifully acted piece, it still has an element of mystery and a subtly buried twist, but nothing to frighten the reindeer. PATRICK MULKERN

Baghdad Central

10.00pm C4

DRAMA We get the feeling that Temple (Bertie Carvel) is hiding things. While his aim of re-establishing an Iraqi police service looks laudable on the surface, something isn't right. And Khafaji, his main recruit, needs to find out what.

As Khafaji (a coolly likeable performance from Waleed Zuaiter) navigates the choppy waters of being a collaborator, we get a sense of the poisoned politics within the Coalition Authority in post-Iraq War Baghdad, where the Brits distrust the Americans (and vice versa) and the Iragis have contempt for both (and vice versa). It's a great setting for a thriller - complicated, full of intrigue, and with the future of a nation in the balance. DAVID BUTCHER

The End

10.00pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA With the plot parameters pegged out in last week's opener, The End really goes for broke. Palliative care doctor Kate (Frances O'Connor) faces a possible law suit, while her suicidal mother Edie (Harriet Walter) is aghast at the retirement village that's now her home. Edie struggles with her grandchildren, too: Persephone has led a tampon protest at school, while transitioning Oberon plays truant to take hallucinogens.

Samantha Strauss's darkly comic Aussie odyssey is defiantly in-yourface, but if you can make it through the brashness, there are magic moments beneath the surface. And a pithy discourse on death and the other subjects families rarely broach. MARK BRAXTON

After a dour fourth series the time-travelling romantic epic is back, settling into a more stable ensemble drama format as the clan gathers in 18th-century America. DOCUMENTARY OF THE WEEK

There's an astonishing scene in this measured documentary, when, after much deliberation, Baddiel meets a denier. The man expounds his views while throwing in what he clearly sees as clinching details: "Auschwitz had a swimming pool, it had bakeries" before he starts ranting about how Baddiel "controls the BBC". Though Baddiel has a good comeback: "If I controlled the BBC, I would be on it more."

Baddiel needs a stiff drink after this bizarre encounter, and he's earned it, but he's clearly angry: "We're not shooting fish in a barrel here – people believe this st."

The film is a fascinating insight into an increasingly common phenomenon. But humanity is restored when Baddiel meets and listens to an Auschwitz survivor. AG See feature: page 14

■ Maleficent: Mistress of Evil ★★
Sky Store/Virgin Movies/DVD & Blu-ray

Angelina Jolie returns as Maleficent in this Disney sequel that sees the vengeful fairy's maternal bond with Aurora (Elle Fanning) tested to its limits when the young princess gets engaged. Michelle Pfeiffer is introduced as a queen and rival to Maleficent, and she and Jolie steal all of their scenes with relish. But while Mistress of Evil offers a bombardment of CGI spectacle to match the original, it fails to add anything memorable to the mythology. JAMES LUXFORD

Quick and quirky

The Fits ★★★★ BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

In this very unusual drama, a young tomboy joins a competitive dance team to make friends, just as an unexplained sickness starts to spread across her school. At barely over an hour, this is a brief but truly unique film from director Anna Rose Holmer, here making her feature debut. In a story set almost entirely within the school walls, the young cast members interact together in a totally natural way. And anchoring it all is a brilliant performance from 11-year-old lead Royalty Hightower. JL

Terror on TCM

The Fog ★★★ 11.00pm TCM

Spectral pirates terrorise a coastal town in John Carpenter's shocker, new to TCM today. The director may not be at the peak of his powers, but some sequences do rack up the tension. And gracing the screen are two generations of scream queens, with Jamie Lee Curtis starring opposite her real-life mum Janet Leigh. ALAN JONES

TUESDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Royal History's Biggest Fibs with Lucy Worsley 9.00pm BBC4

HISTORY New series A historian tells Lucy Worsley: "If you're looking for the origins of Brexit, look no further than Henry VIII." Parallels with Henry's Reformation are inevitable as Worsley, in another series of jaunty debunking documentaries, examines the upheaval wrought by Henry VIII's break with Rome, and the wholesale rejection of Catholicism that saw the sacking of Britain's monasteries in a campaign orchestrated by one of history's great fixers (until he was executed on his boss's orders), Sir Thomas Cromwell.

The idea of England standing alone against a foreign power came directly from Henry and Cromwell, though the Dissolution of the Monasteries, those supposed hotbeds of corruption and wealth, would rob countless ordinary people of the help and support these institutions once provided.

Worsley looks at the myths surrounding Henry's second wife, Anne Boleyn, who's largely been presented as a "sexy Protestant pin-up" when she was a clever, learned young woman with radical religious ideas. ALISON GRAHAM

SPORT Atlético Madrid v Liverpool
When the round-of-16 match-ups were decided back in November, this looked like a clash to savour. But last year's La Liga runners-up are sliding down the Spanish standings after a torrid January in which they managed just one league win, while Liverpool entered February in all competitions.
Atléti at the Wanda Metropolitano

the beating heart of Newlyn for centuries (fishermen actually outnumber holidaymakers and second home-owners) but there are changes ahead. Not only Brexit and EU grants but also the port's £1.3m regeneration plan.

Harbour master Rob Parsons, an amiable (non-Cornish) chap, has the task of making improvements while avoiding job losses but even changing Newlyn fish market's traditional "shout auction" is met with fierce resistance. On a positive note for the industry, Brits are starting to try fish like gurnard and pollack, rather than always choosing cod or haddock. JANE RACKHAM

9.00pm BBC1 (Wales: 10.35pm) DRAMA Top divorce lawyer Hannah

Stern tries her best to cover the tracks of her affair with Creepy

Christie, telling her husband she's "going swimming" when she means

"sexy times with another man".

But Hannah (Nicola Walker) is careless and conflicted. And her lover won't stop stalking her at work, calling her at home, sending her flowers and, worst of all, plastering sticky notes on her computer. "We're not 15!" she twitches.

There are family problems too, in Abi Morgan's big croquembouche of romance, doomed romance and dead romance, when her sister Nina (Annabel Scholey), who craves risk, goes a step too far. The entire series is available as a box set on iPlayer. AG

Universal Credit: Inside the Welfare State

9.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY Jenny is a bubbly 20-year-old waitress from Bolton. Her zero-hours contract means her monthly wages vary enormously, and her Universal Credit fluctuates, too. No wonder she doesn't know whether she's coming or going and wants "a proper job".

Paula, 34, has recently gone on to UC but needs an advance because it's paid in arrears. The temptation to treat herself and her daughter proves too much and she gets into debt, ending up at food banks. Meanwhile, civil servant Neil Couling continues to try to roll out the new system. It's depressing, but this series has given an insight into the difficulties – on all sides. JR

TUESDAY 18 FEBRUARY

Hanssen (Guy Henry) is back in HolbyCity (8pm BBC1; Scotland: 10.35pm), which can surely only mean one thing:
Max McGerry's days are numbered (Jo
Martin, right, recently debuted as a mystery Doctor in Doctor Who). It looks like a scalpels-at-dawn showdown will be coming soon, though Hanssen is adamant he merely wants to ease the hospital's workload. His first job, then?
To perform some routine surgery on Dom's mum Carole. An op that she believes she won't survive...

Cameron's behaviour is becoming more troubling by the episode. In case you haven't clocked this, we get hints from the incidental music, which is more doom-laden whenever Cam's on screen. Maybe Xav can hear the soundtrack too, because he confronts his colleague and accuses him of being a fraud. The show doesn't seem able to exist for too long without a manipulative maniac causing chaos, so what's the betting that Cameron is being lined up as the next Holby supervillain? DAVID BROWN

Ben Fogle: Make a New Life in the Country

9.00pm Channel 5

eagle Kat and her likeable Italian boyfriend Gwill plan to open a pizzeria in the Lake District town of Ulverston. But Kat finds the builders' levels of professionalism don't match what she's used to back in London. "I dunno... I'm on lunch," one responds to a query, while stuffing his face with noodles. But the drama is set to intensify before it improves, and Ben waits until the dust has settled before he arrives – three years later.

It's a miracle there are any homeowners left living in London, when you see how much you can get for your money elsewhere. After this series, there'll probably be fewer. GARY ROSE

How to Stay out of Jail

10.00pm C4

DOCUMENTARY Beneath the silly title lies a sensitive, thought-provoking film about an unusual scheme run by the police in Bishop Auckland, County Durham. There's a nationwide problem with prison overcrowding and a lack of rehabilitation behind bars; the Checkpoint initiative tries to avoid unnecessary incarcerations by working with offenders in their homes.

Those featured have done things that are not trivial – affray, drunk driving – but we see that most are struggling with underlying emotional or mental health issues, often stemming from troubled upbringings, and that a little attention and patience can nullify any ongoing danger to society. That process is fascinating and often gently sad. JACK SEALE

Jett

11.00pm Sky 1

DRAMA A lot is happening in this crazy crime thriller. It's getting as dark and twisted as a licorice factory. If you thought the climax of last week's episode (torture, chainsaws and so on) was pushing the boundaries, this week's opening in no way offers light relief.

A subplot you may have forgotten about moves front and centre. Bennie, the naïve henchman, discovers his obsession with Rosalie (whom he kidnapped for his boss in episode one) comes at quite a cost. Rosalie turns the tables on him and, in the role, Lucy Walters goes to town in a brilliantly odd, sinister scene. As a song on the soundtrack says, "The women play the men like a puppet show." DAVID BUTCHER

The Brit Awards

8.00pm ITV

AWARDS Jack Whitehall is your host for his third consecutive Brits, as the music industry gathers to celebrate the biggest-selling artists of the past year.

From a nominations list that has been criticised for its gender bias – in the categories that anyone can win, the shortlists are overwhelmingly male – the likely board-sweeper is Lewis Capaldi, who has a very good chance of going home with the prizes for British Album of the Year (Divinely Uninspired to a Hellish Extent), Song of the Year (Someone You Loved) and British Male Solo Artist. If anyone can get in the way of Peter Capaldi's second cousin once removed, it'll probably be Stormzy.

Of the few women nominated, Mabel is perhaps best placed to triumph – she's also among the performers on the night, along with Capaldi, Stormzy, Harry Styles and new James Bond theme singer, Billie Eilish. Js

Back to the 80s

John Hughes day from 10.45am Sky Comedy

To mark what would have been director John Hughes's 70th birthday, Sky Comedy presents a glorious quartet of 1980s classics. Matthew Broderick skives off in style in Ferris Bueller's Day Off, but rule-breaking has its consequences for Molly Ringwald, Judd Nelson and fellow students in The Breakfast Club. Steve Martin and John Candy endure the journey from hell in Planes, Trains and Automobiles, while two computer geeks set about creating their dream woman in Weird Science. ELLIE PORTER

Worth seeking out

11:14 ★★★ My5 FREE TO VIEW

The stars come out for writer/director Greg Marcks's complex and quirkily comic film, which is rarely shown on TV but available on Channel 5's catch-up service. Hilary Swank, Patrick Swayze and Colin Hanks are among the disparate suburbanites whose lives cross and collide before, during and after the incident that takes place at the time of the title. This black comedy is a real pleasure and will appeal to those in search of something a bit more challenging than your average Hollywood fare. DAVE ALDRIDGE

The toast of London

Monos ★★★★

Virgin Movies/DVD

Imagine a juddering collision between Lord of the Flies and Heart of Darkness, and you get the gist of Alejandro Landes's thriller, which took the top prize at the 2019 London Film Festival. This study of child soldiers in a Latin American state shifts between wrenching realism, terrifying lyricism and disarming surrealism.

WEDNESDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Cilla: the Lost Tapes 9.00pm ITV

DOCUMENTARY In 2017, as Cilla Black's family home was being put on the market, her son Robert got a big "surprise, surprise" when previously unseen home movies were discovered in the attic. It's footage that chronicles her day-to-day life, but because it's Cilla we're talking about, this involves driving around the estate of her Buckinghamshire mansion in a Rolls-Royce and going on her travels with Ringo Starr.

The beloved entertainer was a millionaire by the time she was 25, so the circles in which she mixed were impossibly glam. But there are also moments of vulnerability captured on audio in interviews with a ghostwriter for her autobiography. Here, Cilla talks about the struggles she faced following the death of husband and manager Bobby Willis and how she found solace through entertaining. And for those who were left open-mouthed by her comeback appearance at the 2001 Royal Variety Performance (the one with the strategically placed light bulbs), there are some cheeky and candid rehearsal clips, accompanied by some sweet recollections from her friend Paul O'Grady. DAVID BROWN

Jon Snow's Very Hard Questions

8.00pm More4

QUIZ New series A new quiz aimed at the high-end, Only Connect market. Two teams of three face a series of titular doozies - if they can answer immediately, that's a four-pointer! If not, they deploy clues (the first letter of the answer, for example, or another question with the same answer) to help, losing a point for each hint used.

Another innovation is that the contestants have clearly been told not to confer in whispers, so we hear their internal debates - one team tonight are adorably comradely. It's not a bad format, although it might need tweaking. It drags apart from the quickfire round: maybe make that the whole show? JACK SEALE

Good Omens

9.00pm BBC2

apocalypse story adapted from Terry Pratchett and Neil Gaiman's novel comes to an end with a typical mix of wry humour and spectacle, where a gentle dinner at a London hotel is just as significant as the fiery form of Satan (voiced by Benedict Cumberbatch) bursting from the ground.

After a brief flashforward, young antichrist Adam's (Sam Taylor Buck) father finally makes his move and it's up to the ragged gang of angels, demons and humans to stand together to hold off armageddon. And as it turns out, the poor IT skills of Jack Whitehall's young witchfinder Newt might just save the day... HUW FULLERTON change is quite rightly a major theme of this likeable tech magazine show, which sees Alice Levine, Jon Richardson and Phil Wang tour three separate countries in search of society-changing gadgets. In Florida, Richardson sees a town powered by its own colossal solar farm: "Wow," says the wearily cynical comedian, noting that this might be the first time in his life he's said that word.

Wang investigates Shanghai's fancy recycling bins, which recognise your face and then automatically pay you the digital equivalent of getting 5p for taking a bottle back to the shop. Less green but still fun: Levine meets some robot dogs. Js

A Very British History

9.00pm BBC4

DOCUMENTARY British-born
Chinese vlogger Shu Lin grew up above her parents' restaurant in the seaside town of Lancing but never ate the food because "it wasn't authentic Cantonese". Her family were one of many who settled here after the Second World War, tapping into our boredom with rationing and bland food. But they were also aspirational, very aware of the importance of education and quick to spot a business opportunity.

As always with social history docs, some of the opinions expressed in the archive footage make you wince, but it's still an enlightening exploration of how the Chinese people established themselves in this country. JANE RACKHAM

WEDNESDAY 19 FEBRUARY

The Freshco Four sounds like they ought to have been involved in a miscarriage-of-justice news story from the 1980s. But no, we are, of course, talking about Ches and Gemma's quads in Coronation Street (7.30pm, 8.30pm ITV). Though for how long the family remains the plaything of the supermarket chain remains to be seen. Tonight's double bill sees Ches sticking it to the man and labelling the marketing campaign a sham. Hence the contract being terminated with immediate effect.

Last autumn, the unveiling of a covered market in Hollyoaks (6.30pm C4) seemed like the least dramatic event ever. But that was before Luke commandeered a crane, crashed it and opened up a sink hole in the road on the market's big opening day. Now, the Cunningham Grande Bazaar is finally set to open, with Cindy looking forward to making a profit. Let's just hope that Luke stays away from the heavy machinery this time around.

Work in Progress

9.40pm Sky Comedy

SITCOM The niceties of gender politics are a big part of this US sitcom, which might not make it sound funny, but it is. Our hero, Abby, doesn't like the label "lesbian" ("Lesbians are old women," she grumbles) but is her friend right to suggest that, since she is now dating a trans man, she no longer counts as a lesbian anyway?

The script keeps glancing off that issue while it satirises other things – a therapist's funeral, a slimmers' club run by absurdly perky women, and a performance-art event that looks faintly terrifying (and makes Abby feel old). And in a great scene Abby realises she doesn't need a therapist: talking to a picture of her therapist works just as well. DAVID BUTCHER

Home

10.00pm C4

SITCOM There's nothing wrong with a bit of wish-fulfilment now and again – many of Home's best moments serve that purpose, none more so than tonight's opening sequence. If you've ever wondered what you'd do when confronted with a racist on a bus berating a fellow passenger for not speaking English, here's a satisfying fantasy solution.

While the cool wit of Sami (Youssef Kerkour, delightful in every moment as always) leads him into a tentative flirtation, Peter (writer/star Rufus Jones) is aghast when his first Uber passengers are less tentative with each other in the back seat. That's another cracking set-piece, softening us up for a second half that's tense and brittle. Js

EastEnders: Back to Ours

11.00pm BBC4

chat between Pam St Clement and Barbara Windsor, in which they watch classic Pat and Peggy scenes, was first shown five years ago to mark EastEnders's 30th anniversary. But as we're now celebrating the soap's 35th birthday, it's getting a welcome repeat alongside the endlessly quotable bonfire night episode from 2000 that saw Peggy exposing Pat and Frank's affair in the Vic and slapping them both around the chops.

Their conversation is giggly, gossipy (watch out for the dig against Wendy Richard) and – given the current state of Windsor's health – poignant. It's a lovely reminder of two top Walford matriarchs in their prime. DAVID BROWN

Spy in the Wild 9.00pm BBC1

NATURE It's a chilly end to the series as we're spying on creatures that live in the Arctic and Antarctic. We start with a fluffy king penguin spy chick that has an unfortunate malfunction at a critical moment and face-plants into the snow. Elsewhere, spy puffin has perfected such an enchanting head flick greeting that it attracts a wide circle of admiring puffin mates.

We're probably not meant to find these animatronic animals as cute as the real ones, but some are simply adorable. However, although all the spy creatures capture great footage, a few don't fool the smarter animals, while others come to an untimely end. Arctic wolf spy pup moves as stiffly as those yappy, back-flipping children's toys so can't keep up with the pack, while poor old elephant seal spy is completely deflated after a mating brawl.

Nick Knowles, Laurence Llewelyn-Bowen and volunteers are in Avening, in the Cotswolds, to help Ben, whose life was changed by an accident in Cyprus in 2016, when he fell head first into the shallow end of a pool, breaking his neck in three places. After months of treatment in both Cyprus and Germany, he was flown back to Britain, where the Salisbury spinal unit helped him progress. But Ben's home needs to be adapted, with a two-storey extension including a lift. The community-spirited people of Avening have already donated time and money to break ground on the project, so the team is joining in to finish the build. Director Charley Adams Series producer Hamish Summers (R) (S) (AD) (HD)

A/4 Series 2. The Poles. The spy cameras venture into dangerous territory in the Arctic and in Antarctica. On South Georgia, "Spy Chick" is nestling among 200,000 king penguins when it is attacked by a scavenging sheathbill and left at the mercy of a giant petrel. On Norway's Hornoya island, "Spy Puffin" joins thousands of male puffins searching for their life partners by bobbing heads to recognise their loved ones – but when young, single males fight to break up established pairs, "Spy Puffin" is caught in the crossfire. Things are less violent but just as tough for "Penguincam" as it braves an Antarctic storm to bring, for the first time, detailed time-lapse footage of how emperor penguins share warmth in the middle of a huddle. Plus footage of walruses, polar bears, elephant seals, and guillemot chicks racing Arctic foxes. See p85.

The Red Shoes/Black Narcissus

BBC iPlayer FREE TO VIEW

Today marks 30 years since the death of British film titan Michael Powell, whose legendary status is defined by his partnership with Hungarian émigré Emeric Pressburger. Two of Powell and Pressburger's finest films are available on BBC iPlayer right now: scorching ballerina melodrama The Red Shoes (1948), starring Moira Shearer (pictured); and Black Narcissus (1947), a torrid, Technicolor tale of forbidden love in the Himalayas. Having won an Oscar for his debut Son of Saul (2015), director Laszlo Nemes displays laudable ambition with his sophomore outing. Set in Budapest in 1913, the complex, convoluted story sees orphan Juli Jakab in danger when she discovers the existence of an older sibling involved in the criminal underworld. The film looks wonderful, but the narrative will either enthral you as you attempt to fathom its multifarious mysteries or simply drive you to baffled distraction. DAVID PARKINSON

Double trouble

Gemini Man ★★ Sky Store/Virgin Movies/DVD

Cutting-edge technology alone doesn't make a film great, and the latest from from Ang Lee (Life of Pi) is proof. Will Smith plays an assassin pursued by a mystery man, who happens to be his own cloned self. Alas, once the novelty of this digitally accomplished scenario wears off, the attention begins to wander.

THURSDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Best Home Cook 8.00pm BBC1

FOOD How mean are Mary Berry, Angela Hartnett and Chris Bavin? The three finalists arrive in the kitchen clutching their "ultimate" recipe, only to be told that the judges are changing the format. They're starting with the rustle-up challenge, followed by the eliminator round – after which one of them will be leaving. The cooks' confidence sinks faster than deflated soufflé.

There have been extreme highs and lows throughout the competition: a sugar-free children's cake made with avocado wasn't a success, while duck ragu pasta with a sprinkling of crackling was a massive hit. And, of course, food has fallen on the floor, joyful tears have been shed and hopes have been dashed.

The final challenge is to prepare three mouth-watering courses for a special dinner party. The last two standing are so evenly matched, it leaves the judges with the almost impossible task of picking a winner. "Shall we toss a coin?" asks Bavin, semi-seriously. JANE RACKHAM

Europa League Football

from 5.15pm BT2/ESPN/BT3

SPORT A European run-out for two of the Premier League's most inconsistent sides: first Manchester United travel to Belgium to face Club Brugge (k/o 5.55pm), then Arsenal are in action in Greece, against Olympiacos (k/o 8pm). It's the first big test for Mikel Arteta, who seems to be inspiring better performances, if not results, while the axe continues to hover above United's Ole Gunnar Solskjaer – a convincing win would bring a stay of execution, but a humiliation could hasten the end.

Also in the round of 32 is Wolves, who take on Espanyol (k/o 8pm BT Sport ESPN), while the SPL's big fish, Celtic and Rangers, face, respectively, Copenhagen (k/o 5.55pm) and Braga (k/o 8pm) on BT3. HANNAH SHADDOCK

Secrets of the Museum

8.00pm BBC2

surprise viewers to learn that London's Victoria and Albert Museum has a "rapid response" unit.
But of course they don't restore law and order; they're on the lookout for what a curator calls "new objects of lasting interest". So conservator Corinna hits the streets of London during the 2019 Extinction Rebellion climate-change protests, keen to secure a representation of ER's logo, a circle containing an hourglass X.

More sedately, the museum is organising an exhibition of Mary Quant clothing and, after a public appeal, a lady from Sheffield donates her 1964 mini-dress. She is overcome when she sees it finally go on display. ALISON GRAHAM

The Secret Life of the Zoo

8.00pm C4

pressure on female animals without offspring, not only because it's vital for species to reproduce, but because it often relegates females to the bottom of the group's hierarchy. Dominant meerkat Huskie should give birth every three months or so, but she's not been pregnant for ages. And since the fire at Chester Zoo, the traumatised rhinoceros hornbills have shown no interest in mating. A new lovenest may help.

Parenthood is tricky, too. Kyra, the one-year-old sun bear, "looks cute but is a devil child", while Niko, a two-year-old lowland anoa, is a proper mummy's boy... actually, he keeps trying to mount her. JR been stabbed in the chest, one of three stabbings brought in to Aintree Hospital that day. "He's half a centimetre away from being dead at the scene," says the trauma surgeon.

Meanwhile frequent visitor Frank arrives at the Royal Liverpool University Hospital. He's homeless, drunk and for the umpteenth time behaves aggressively towards the remarkably patient staff. Cases like this put a strain on the already creaking system, so reluctantly he's banned from A&E (unless it's an emergency), even though this won't solve his problems. "We're a barometer of what's going on in society," says A&E consultant Terry wearily. It's a sobering thought. JR

THURSDAY 20 FEBRUARY

Tonight's crisis at Butler's Farm in Emmerdale (7.00pm, 8.00pm ITV) sounds like the kind of drama the Cartwrights would have faced on the Ponderosa ranch in Bonanza. Rustlers are targeting livestock and Cain (who, out of the blue, has become a gun-wielding vigilante) ends up shooting someone he spies approaching Moira in the darkness of the barn.

Now, Cain (Jeff Hordley) obviously assumes that the shadowy figure is the person who's been stealing the sheep, but he and Moira (Natalie J Robb) are set to get a surprise when they discover who's really taken a bullet. Not that I want to sound nonchalant about this poor injured person, but I do hope that the cliffhanger scenes result in Cain and Moira being drawn back into each other's orbit. Splitting them up was such a mistake, so I think I speak for all of us when lask for them to be reunited. And preferably before Cain morphs into the village's answer to Charles Bronson in Death Wish. Hunted

9.00pm C4

REALITY After four days on the run the ground hunters bag a fugitive relatively easily.

Posh Londoner Toni was last seen in a garden centre car park. Since then she has dramatically changed her appearance and is cannily getting friends of friends to help her escape – but will that be enough to throw the hunters off the scent? Meanwhile, Jess and Ella haven't been spotted once.

Much has been made of how high maintenance Hayley is. "Dan's going to want to yomp over hills and Hayley's going to want to put her eyelashes on," says one of the HQ team contemptuously. At that point you kind of hope Hayley will prove him wrong and evade capture. JR

First Dates

10.00pm C4

ENTERTAINMENT Of course, not all the singletons on this show, which returns tonight for a new series, find love like Ajai and Hema, the couple featured in this week's RT. But the dates are usually so well matched, you'd actually expect more weddings.

Tonight "proper geezer" Jamie tries not to put his foot in it with Leigh, who's looking for someone who's good with his hands. Retired firefighter David wants someone to "relight his fire" (the puns never get better). Could that be Shelly, who lost her partner seven years ago?

Lastly, steampunk enthusiast Joe can't believe his luck when he meets Jess – she dressed as a Victorian for her former job at a living museum. JR See feature: page 26

The Deuce

10.20pm Sky Atlantic

DRAMA After three series, this is it. The sad arc of The Deuce, charting how a sub-culture of New York City rose and fell in the 1970s and 1980s, ends tonight. As always in this show, there is top-notch writing from George Pelecanos and David Simon, with some memorable parting shots.

Alston, the dry police lieutenant who has played a key role in cleaning up Times Square, has a speech pointing out that all they've done is shift the problem elsewhere so that property developers can make money. Our heroes, Candy and Vincent, do what they have to do. But be warned: it's an extended episode with a left turn after an hour or so as we cut to 2019 for a coda...full of ghosts. DAVID BUTCHER

Death in Paradise

9.00pm BBC1

DRAMA The delightful Officer Ruby Patterson (Shyko Amos) gets a story with a bit more heft than usual when she comes face to face with a man who broke her heart. Unfortunately, he's betrothed to another, though there's some doubt that the wedding will go ahead after the bride's aunt is murdered.

Patterson gets into a right pickle when she interviews her old flame, who's a bit of a smoothie, and ends up in big trouble with her stolid uncle, the Commissioner.

Meanwhile, the supposedly temporary DI Neville Parker (Ralf Little) is still around, scratching himself maniacally, so that he can investigate the murder – the victim having been found stabbed to death under the hairdryer at a beauty salon on the morning of her niece's wedding. Luckily Nev is just as predisposed to those lightbulb "I've got it!" moments as his predecessors... ALISON GRAHAM

Ben Is Back ★★★ Amazon Prime

Julia Roberts stars here as the mother of a recovering drug addict (Lucas Hedges) who comes home unexpectedly. Directed in a no-nonsense fashion by Lucas's dad, Peter (Dan in Real Life), the film portrays a family dynamic that is believably flawed. Roberts cycles through the emotions as she fights to see her son reformed, while Hedges is the very essence of a raw nerve. Unfortunately, a series of convoluted twists sends these characters on a needless journey that dilutes the story's intensity. JAMES LUXFORD

Steven Gerrard: Make Us Dream ★★★★

ITV Player FREE TO VIEW

Liverpool fans should feel a twinge of guilt while watching this intimate profile of Steven Gerrard. By placing all their hopes of ending the long wait for a Premier League title on their No 8 and captain, they imposed an intolerable physical and psychological burden that almost broke his body and spirit. This film blends poignant archive footage with frank voiceover commentary to tell Gerrard's story, from gifted youngster to hero of his home-town team. DAVID PARKINSON

A historical classic

1.30pm TCM Rod Steiger gives a magnificent performance as Napoleon, heading for his destiny in Belgium, in this epic history lesson from Ukrainian director Sergei Bondarchuk. But Steiger is nearly outshone by Christopher Plummer as the Duke of Wellington, who shows his contempt for lower-class cannon fodder. TOM HUTCHINSON

FRIDAY Choices The pick of today's TV

PICK OF THE DAY Gogglebox 9.00pm C4

ENTERTAINMENT Some of us in the Gogglebox community are still trying to get over the fact that, in the Christmas edition, Pete and "his little sister" Sophie let slip they'd never seen the film Gremlins before. It caused quite a Twitter storm. Even more than Jenny telling friend Lee she'd never watched a single episode of Gavin & Stacey before proceeding to weep at the finale.

They're back on their sofas this evening to share their insightful/misguided/witty/daft opinions about the week's TV. Over an astonishing 14 series to date, we've come to view the Goggleboxers as old friends. We've watched kids grow up (and celebrated births), lost a few members to other TV shows and even shared June's sadness when husband Leon died.

There may be some newbies but this isn't confirmed in advance. Nor are the details of which programmes will be featured: it could be anything from Shock of the Nude with Mary Beard to Love Island... actually there are a few similarities there. JANE RACKHAM

The Yorkshire Steam Railway: All Aboard

8.00pm Channel 5

pocumentary It's summer, and peak season for the North Yorkshire Moors Railway as this pleasantly undemanding series returns.

Passengers queue in the sunshine at Pickering railway station awaiting the arrival of a newly reconditioned engine, an American S160.

It's not universally loved among the railway's largely volunteer staff, one of whom dismisses all US engines as "intensely nasty machines, and they're not British!" Well, fair enough. But a Gloucestershire businessman has funded the refurbishment in memory of his dad, and is visiting for the day so he can have a trip on board. Will his plans be stymied..?

ALISON GRAHAM

Our Coast

8.30pm BBC2 (not N Ireland or Wales)

displayed a very Noakesian sense of derring-do in her years as a Blue Peter presenter. So she's the perfect choice to test the waters of the North Channel, considered to be one of the most dangerous swims in the world. It's properly cold. Minus 10 degrees Celsius, in fact. And there's a risk of the body going into panic. But Skelton embraces the risk with a grin – even though there's an added danger of being stung by a lion's mane jellyfish.

Not to be outdone, Mehreen Baig goes kayaking on the turbulent Strangford Lough, while Adrian Chiles gets a buzz from road-testing the world's largest hydraulic crane. DAVID BROWN

Would I Lie to You?

9.00pm BBC1

comed "I haven't got any trousers on!" announces David Mitchell at one point in this "unseen bits" compilation. This has nothing to do with bits seen or unseen. It's not even part of his own truth-or-lie story but a casual ad lib connected to Liz Bonnin's tale about getting her hand stuck in a tube of Pringles (other crisps are available) during filming in Australia.

Other delights include a breathtakingly smart exchange between Kiri Pritchard-McLean and Lee Mack about feminism, Sharon Osbourne's obvious confusion over the whole concept of the game and the possibility that Victoria Coren Mitchell has a pet name for her husband David. JR

Just One Look

9.00pm More4

DRAMA This sleek French thriller, adapted from the Harlan Coben novel, is like a high-wire circus act, balancing all manner of diverse plot strands. Holding up all the stories is the poised Virginie Ledoyen, who shifts her weight effortlessly between playing the heroine Eva as a grimly determined detective who'll do anything to get her kidnapped husband back and a fragile woman still traumatised by the accident at the catacombs years earlier.

Her role as a loving mother keeping her children's minds off their missing dad is sorely tested when a discovery is made in the family home – and that remorseless killer turns up at her kids' school.

Well, this is it: the night when we learn who dies in this birthday week for EastEnders (8.30pm BBC1). The show began in February 1985 with a death (Reg Cox, revealed much later to have been done in by Nick Cotton), so it seems only fitting that the grim reaper now claims another victim.

But who is the poor soul who doesn't make it through to the weekend? We've recently learnt that Jasmine Armfield is leaving, so surely Bex is the hot favourite to meet her maker? Mind you, the Carter family has been prominent of late, so perhaps drunken Linda ends up inadvertently causing the demise of one of her own clan. Maybe Tina? Now, to a non-fan, I can see how this speculation may seem ghoulish. But it's actually one of the main joys of soap: we get to experience a sneaky thrill witnessing the misfortune of others, while also being thankful that we haven't chosen to spend our evening on an ill-fated party boat heading for catastrophe. DAVID BROWN The view from Kellie Bright's sofa: p154

Bumps

9.30pm BBC1

COMEDY The BBC publicity blurb for Bumps claims it's an "uplifting cross-generational comedy offering a whole new spin on family dynamics". Well, er, maybe. Or maybe not.

It's a Comedy Playhouse pilot from actors/writers Lucy Montgomery and Rhys Thomas, who both appear. Amanda Redman is loud, hapless, well-meaning Anita, who's in her 60s and feeling a bit bored and lonely.

Her two self-obsessed grown-up children have their own lives from which she's largely excluded and, for some reason that's never explained, she does the shopping for a nice airline pilot who lives in a big house.

Anita's solution to her stagnant life is to have a baby, but her daughter drops a bombshell. AG

Frankie Boyle's Tour of Scotland

10.00pm BBC2

DOCUMENTARY There's a loose theme to each of the comedian's travelogues. This week, as he journeys from Glasgow to Ayr, he's looking at the importance of communities. First, he catches up with his old martial arts teacher Tommy Carruthers. Tommy's wee, but fiendishly fit, working with the purist principles that motivated Bruce Lee. Boyle has clearly retained much of what he was once taught worth bearing in mind if you ever fancy heckling him.

Aside from the stand-up routine that ends the programme, the biggest smile comes from seeing Boyle's childlike delight as he hits the dodgems in Troon with a member of a showman family. GILL CRAWFORD

The Graham Norton Show

10.35pm BBC1 (N Ireland: 11.05pm) CHAT Tonight's show is a compilation, which, in view of his not-entirelysuccessful hosting of the Baftas, is probably a relief to Graham Norton who might like a break from A-listers.

Coincidentally, in the line-up is Hugh Grant, whose Bridget Jones joke about winner Renée Zellweger went down rather well with the Albert Hall audience. Plus there's heavyweight champion Anthony Joshua (who sportingly submitted to a test of strength against Greg Davies); Formula One champ Lewis Hamilton, who revealed he can lose four kilos in weight during a race; and Jennifer Aniston, who broke the internet with her Friends pic, although she couldn't explain what that meant. Intelligence

9.00pm, 9.30pm Sky 1

SITCOM New series Friends star David Schwimmer makes a return to comedy with this sitcom set in the murky world of GCHQ. He plays Jerry, an obnoxious hotshot from the National Security Agency, who is parachuted into Cheltenham from America as part of an intelligence sharing initiative. On arrival he meets Joseph (Nick Mohammed, who also writes the show), an inept computer analyst who's somewhat starstruck by this new arrival. However, he soon finds out that everything isn't quite as it seems when it comes to his new hero.

Snappy dialogue and laugh-outloud performances (especially from Schwimmer, who's a world away from Ross here) make episode one, in particular, a treat. By episode two the premise has altered slightly and arguably it isn't as strong. However, this is a funny, refreshing take on a workplace comedy that definitely deserves a watch. She's weepy and creepy ☐ The Curse of La Llorona ★★★

8.00pm Sky Premiere

The Mexican legend of La Llorona, the weeping woman whose wailing heralds child abduction and death, gets a decent telling from the people who brought us The Conjuring. When two boys drown, social worker Linda Cardellini initially pooh-poohs the idea that a wailing spectre is responsible... but soon realises there may be some truth in it. A meatier script and fleshed-out characters would have raised the fright bar, but this still makes an impression. DAVE ALDRIDGE

A Netflix exclusive

■ The Last Thing He Wanted ★★ Netflix

Director Dee Rees follows the blistering Mudbound with this adaptation of Joan Didion's novel. Set in the early 1980s, the story sees Anne Hathaway's reporter assigned to the presidential campaign trail. But when she becomes embroiled in an arms deals set up by her estranged father (Willem Dafoe), events take a weirder, ludicrous turn. Ben Affleck puts in a typically enigmatic performance as a slippery government official, but the narrative is frustratingly fidgety, with little in the way of clear focus. EMMA SIMMONDS

In cinemas today...

The Government boycott of Today is petty and undemocratic – but minister-free radio isn't all bad news, says Roger Mosey

OMETHING STRANGE HAS been going on in the political jungle. The big beasts are no longer going along to have their breakfast with the Today programme; they are to be found instead on the likes of LBC and 5 Live. It is the current policy of the Government that ministers will not appear on Radio 4's flagship show – a decision attributed to Boris Johnson's adviser Dominic Cummings, with a Downing Street official describing being on Today as "a total waste of time".

There is nothing terribly new in this. When I was editor of the programme in the 1990s there was a boycott organised by the Conservative minister Jonathan Aitken, who claimed that we were "poisoning the well of democratic debate". That crisis was short-lived, and Mr Aitken turned out not to be the gold standard of integrity when he was later sent to prison for perjury. But all an editor can do in the current circumstances is stand up for journalistic independence, take comfort in knowing the row will subside, sooner or later - and fill the airwaves with an alternative set of guests.

That is what Today has done in the past few weeks, and pretty successfully. In place of the junior minister from the department of paperclips, there are experts and commentators instead. This has often been illuminating, especially during the coronavirus crisis when many of us would rather hear from a scientist who knows something about epidemics than from Matt Hancock. "The programme is obviously better without ministers, most days," says one insider; and a former BBC editor applauds "the booking of some excellent people who are genuinely informative". This is particularly praiseworthy when Today is locked in an internal BBC battle to stop cuts being threatened by the news directorate, which is seeking to lose 450 jobs in total.

Hearing fewer ministers while we're eating our cornflakes may be refreshing, though for producers it creates a headache when they have a complete absence of key players. The Today team must have been particularly cheesed off when the Prime Minister popped up recently in a live interview on their television rival, BBC Breakfast; and the cabinet minister Michael Gove similarly gave an array of news lines to Nick Ferrari (LBC) and Nicky Campbell (5 Live) that were denied to Nick Robinson (Radio 4).

This example shows the petty-mindedness, at best, or the anti-democratic bullying, at worst, of this administration. It is absurd to shut out millions of Today listeners from the views of elected officials - and on the top stories, from terrorism to trade talks, there is an obligation to accountability that should include being grilled on the nation's biggest daily current affairs programme.

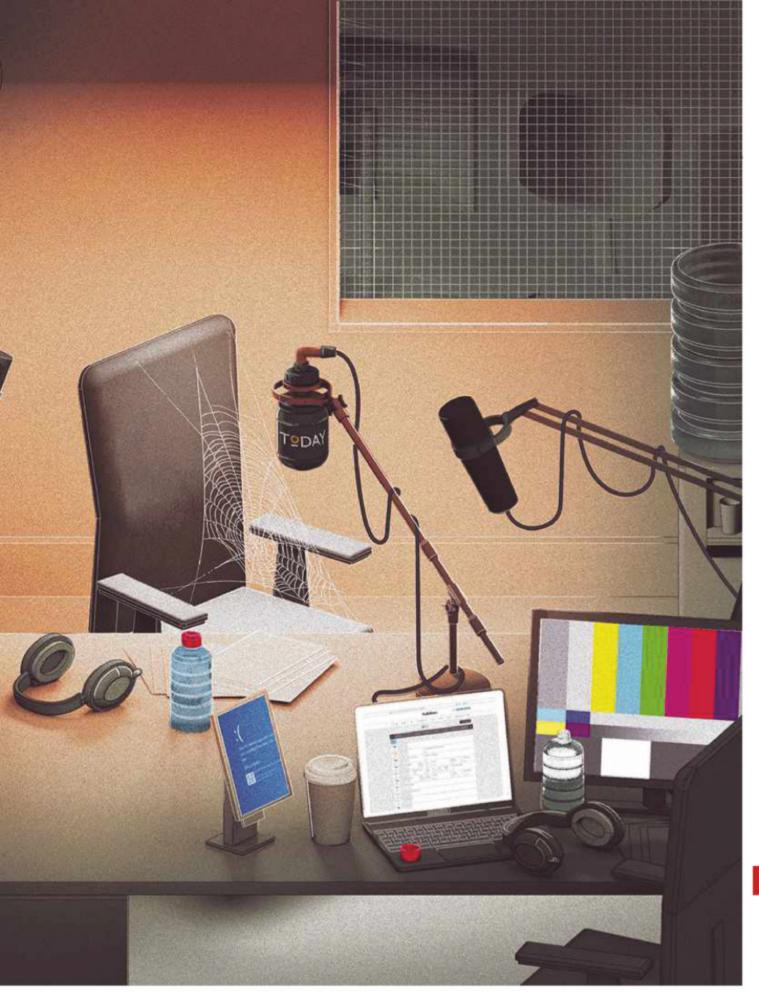

But the broadcasters shouldn't place their feet too firmly on the moral high ground. I spent a day in Leeds earlier this month talking to school students as part of a Selwyn College, Cambridge outreach initiative. The students were keen to engage with the issues that will shape their lives, but despairing of 2020's line-up of politicians. From a couple of dozen students, only one could name a politician she was inspired by - and that was the Scottish First Minister Nicola Sturgeon, who is unlikely ever to be an electoral option in Yorkshire. But they weren't fans of media coverage of politics, either. To them it seemed all to be about repetitive soundbites, a narrow range of topics that don't interest them, and television formats that fail to hold their attention. Few of them ever watch the network news.

Those trends are not confined to the young. I come across plenty of older people who share the view that the traditional media had a feeble election campaign in 2019, obsessing too much about trivia and becoming trapped in the Westminster-dominated political circus. That was exemplified by ITV's Good Morning Britain trolling the Tory campaign and putting live on to the air – at 6.37am – one of their staff chasing Boris Johnson round a dairy and demanding an interview. Then every other media outlet joined in by claiming that Johnson had hidden in a fridge, which was a loose interpretation of what had happened. It was amusing, yes, but it was also a million miles away from the preoccupations of voters who wanted to know what the party leaders would do to improve education or the health service.

AM SURE this is one of the thoughts in Dominic Cummings's head. He is reported to have said that the Today boycott would only be ended when "they change format and actually start explaining subjects in a serious way".

No broadcaster should dance to a political tune, but the challenge is a real one. Policy is complex. There are tricky choices facing us about our relationships with the rest of the world and how we fund our public services. Politicians try to gloss over that complexity by coming up with slogans, and too often the media allow those to stand. Political correspondents devote too much of their energy to topics they and their chums find enticing, such as who is up and who is down in a party leadership contest.

The minister-free Today programme has offered some glimpses of what an alternative to the status quo might be like. Experts do have a role to play, and calm explanation is more useful than a five-minute joust between a presenter and a party hack. Politicians are better held to account in well-researched set pieces than in the rush of breaking news, but if journalists on radio, television and online could unleash their creativity and think boldly and radically about better ways of covering politics, they would be doing us all a favour.

PICK OF THE WEEK

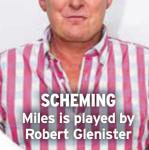

Fault Lines: Money, Sex and Blood Sun 3.00pm and Mon-Fri 2.15pm Radio 4

As a judge of the BBC Audio Drama Awards, I am acutely aware that a starry cast does not guarantee a winning production. The script, the score, the sound effects, the production values and the director all have a vital role to play. I am happy to report that Fault Lines has combined all of these with award-winning gongs on. And it doesn't hurt that each of the six dramas is held together by Glenda Jackson.

Inspired by Blood, Sex and Money – the sequence of serials based upon Emile Zola's Rougon-Macquart novels so admired by listeners and critics alike – director Pauline Harris has brought together contemporary writers to craft a portrait of a modern British family storing secrets and seeping blood.

Jackson is the dying matriarch, determined to throw light upon the murky corners of those skeleton-packed cupboards. She begins close to home with son Miles, played by Robert Glenister (right), who happens to be the richest and most machiavellian man in the UK.

This packs a powerfully prescient punch on the state of Britain today. Quality drama at its very best. I sense an award coming on...

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

Lynda and Lilian have a long history of needling each other, but it's about to morph into open warfare. Lynda has become a thorn in the side of the staff at the B at Ambridge, but when her latest scheme proves ineffectual, she takes drastic action that quickly gains her attention. But will Lynda come out on top in the resulting clash with Lilian?

Emma and Gavin continue to grow close, but Ed finds himself in an awkward position when he inadvertently gets involved. Despite wise counsel from Jazzer, Ed is set to find Emma's new situation difficult to deal with. Finally, Kate returns from her course and, naturally, brings drama back home with her. As she and Jakob make plans, Kate makes an admission that could change everything. DAVID BROWN

Stay with me...

A Radio 4 rival beckons, but we're ready

T HAD TO happen. A whole new radio station is coming soon, branded by the two most powerful words in the English language, Radio and Times. It's the new plan from Rupert Murdoch to compete with Radio 4, and he has cleverly hit on using these same two words – but in reverse.

Times Radio will saddle up thoroughbreds from the stable of the Thunderer. I'm a massive fan of many Times people. With luck, we'll get glorious writers like Giles Coren and Janice Turner. Three of my favourite broadcasters already have a perch there: Sathnam Sanghera, David Aaronovitch and Matthew Parris, so more of them, please.

And behind the scenes, Murdoch's been busy hiring some of my colleagues from, guess where, Radio 4! It's proof that to compete properly with the BBC, you must first slag it off, then hire its people. So this seems a good moment to reveal the truth about the millions of people – perhaps including you – who actually listen to the thing. I can do this based on reading the postcards, letters and emails from tens of thousands of real-life R4 listeners who have written to me.

First up, everything that's said about the typical Radio 4 listener is wrong. Media people love to categorise us by age, by region of the country and by class and gender. They paint the picture of a mythical middle-class listener who spends their life shire-stepping in sensible shoes, either moaning about what they hear, or loving it totally, toting a hessian shopping bag in the shape of Woman's Hour's Jane Garvey.

Yes, millions do listen in the Home Counties, and the average age of the listener is around 57. But all sorts of people listen to Radio 4, from Mood Mums (women of 35) to Replenishers (people under 30) to people who live about as far from London and the South East as it is possible to be. How do I know? Because they write to me.

On my desk I keep the hundreds of postcards sent to Broadcasting House after I asked if anyone posted them any more. "Here's a card of the inspection of the overflow pipe of Brighton sewers. At last I have found someone who will enjoy reading it. PHEW. HB." "Dear BH, here's a card of beautiful Jersey, I live in Exeter and got the postcard habit from my mum. Best Kathy." "This is Birkenhead Park, near where I live. The 1917 Eisteddfod where Hedd Wyn was awarded the Black Chair after he died at Passchendaele was held here. Roger." Whenever I'm asked to clear them away, I simply move them from the left-hand side of the desk, by the coffee mug, to the right, by the mouse droppings.

on't tell Murdoch, but we get a wall of love, not hate, from our listeners. I'm not talking about the Twitter mob attacks, the virtual equivalent of standing under a seagull-strewn lamp-post. I'm talking about Mrs Hollis, the woman who writes one card to me each week, with views on the single item in the programme she finds most interesting.

Prisoners, teachers, soldiers, pensioners, lorry drivers, posties, milkies, sparkies, teenagers – all of them write to us. Even doctors, with their handwriting challenges. The most terrifying thing for Times Radio must be that these people adore Radio 4. But the most terrifying thing for the BBC might well be that it needs reminding.

Paddy O'Connell hosts Broadcasting House on Sunday at 9am on Radio 4, and co-hosts the podcast Dogpod

Podcasts tell the best stories

New research into our listening habits indicates that 17 per cent of the population now listen to podcasts. The obvious corollary of this is that over 80 per cent of the population still don't listen to them (and it's reasonable to suppose that half of those wouldn't even be really sure what a podcast is). But when you consider that last year only 12 per cent of us listened to them it's clear that this is a growing medium, particularly among the young. The BBC's latest long-form podcast series, Fake Heiress, a tale of impeccably dressed young people managing to con their way into life's VIP lounge, seems aimed squarely at one particular subset of that audience, the young women.

The long con

Fake Heiress tells the tale of Anna Delvey (née Sorokin), a Russian émigrée who managed to convince much of smart Manhattan society that she was wealthy and well-connected. Actually, it was a particular section of smart Manhattan society she managed to convince: she targeted the younger set, the kind who read labels, not newspapers. She dispensed $100 tips in fancy hotels, which meant she got away without paying her bill for months. Until the law caught up with her, she lived the life of a reality TV millionairess. She's inspired a book, producers Shonda Rhimes and Lena Dunham are both developing treatments of her career for the screen and now here comes the BBC with their version.

Anna Sorokin

This mixes straight documentary treatment with dramatised reconstructions, not always happily. "Some scenes will be fictionalised," presenter Vicky Baker says at the outset, "because what's Anna Delvey's story without a bit of make-believe?" At which point the shade of Lord Reith can be heard rattling his chains.

The home of True Crime

Podcasting is increasingly the natural home of True Crime. What fascinates people about crime is the detail. When the verdict was announced recently in the trial of Reynhard Sinaga, who was jailed for 136 rapes in the Manchester area, my first unworthy thought was to find a podcast about it to get said detail. I didn't want the lurid side of it. I just wanted the prosaic side. The best account was given in an episode of the BBC's Beyond Today, by the BBC's Daniel De Simone, who had attended the trial and could provide it. His account of how Sinaga came to be arrested is the kind of thing you would never understand if you had to read it. You need to be told. Telling is what podcasts do best.

Today's Choices

Private Passions

12 noon Radio 3 Jonathan Aitken's journey from disgraced politician languishing in Belmarsh prison to chaplain in Pentonville is well documented - an operatic life, as Michael Berkeley puts it. But he also has a deep musical hinterland, and here Aitken (above) reveals a childhood friendship with Benjamin Britten, and how he passed notes to fellow Wagnerian Michael Portillo during Cabinet, and he tells a fantastic story about an impromptu performance of Gilbert and Sullivan involving Richard Nixon and Harold Wilson. DAVID CRAWFORD

Drama on 3: The Likes of Us

7.30pm Radio 3

The small west London district of Notting Dale is steeped in history, of which Grenfell Tower became a part in 2017. Roy Williams, whose mother lived close by, uses this as inspiration for a poignant play that is part love story, part an examination of an intense mother/daughter relationship, and part an indictment of human nature. As Roy says, "We need to step on somebody in order to feel better." JANE ANDERSON

Girls of Riyadh

10.45am/7.45pm Radio 4 Rajaa al-Sanea (above) was a 25-year-old dentistry student when her eye-opening account of life for young women in contemporary Saudi Arabia was published in 2008. Her focus is four friends who are members of "the velvet class" - the educated upper-middle class. Their interactions with men are severely restricted. So how to conduct matters with boyfriends? By text, of course... Written as email updates that are forwarded ever wider, Girls of Riyadh shows how people in restrictive regimes can be liberated by the internet. Dramatised here by Claudine Toutoungi. FIONA HUGHES

Like any other art form, comedy thrives on what came before, yet we tend to think of our most successful comedians as sui generis – as having emerged fully formed. On page 20 we publish an edited version of the talk that Susan Calman is giving tomorrow on Victoria Wood. SIMON O'HAGAN

Today's Choices

In the Studio 11.30am/11.30pm BBC World Service

Over the course of a multidisciplinary career, the British-Israeli designer Ron Arad (above) has warped everyday household objects into shapes that trick the mind - from a mirrored sculpture that doubles as a ping pong table to a map on a wall that is actually a bookcase. Here, Edwina Pitman is invited into Arad's labyrinthine studio to chart one of his ongoing projects, a string quartet that plays itself. There is something strangely beguiling about these illusory installations. TOM GOULDING

Short Cuts

3.00pm Radio 4

Producer Eleanor McDowall's finely curated world of atmospheric and intriguing micro-documentaries and aural adventures returns with more unexpected gems, themed today, counterintuitively, around endurance. Cockroaches scuttle around a shimmering essay from a worker at a desert nuclear reactor. Runner Kathrine Switzer talks about her (literal) struggle to become the first woman to run the Boston marathon in 1967, followed by an out-of-breath woman reading the lonely hearts from old issues of the Chicago Reader newspaper; finding love can be exhausting. DAVID CRAWFORD

Ken Cheng: Chinese Comedian

11.00pm Radio 4

Drawling Ken Cheng (above) was a BBC New Comedy Award finalist in 2015. And after making a splash on social media, he was rewarded in 2018 with that notoriously back-handed compliment, the late-night slot on Radio 4. Two years later he's back in the same slot and basically doing the same shtik. Why, I wondered, is he still making jokes about being mistaken for Phil Wang? Few would deny that there's something about radio comedy formats that stifles new, young comedians. Cheng's comedy is much more innovative on Twitter. DAVID McGILLIVRAY

Radio 3 in Concert

7.30pm Radio 3

Tonight's live Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra concert is framed by two symphonies written two decades apart: one of the late masterpieces Haydn wrote for London in the 1790s, and the finest of the early symphonies Schubert wrote for an amateur orchestra made up largely of old schoolmates. In between, Jeremy Denk performs Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto No 1 – a work once so popular that Berlioz joked it could play itself – plus a musical birthday present Schumann wrote for his wife Clara.

Today's Choices

Teatime

11.30am Radio 4 Katherine Jakeways (above) is a prolific and gifted provider of radio comic drama (as well as an actress), and her latest glows with human warmth. We're at home with newlyweds Vicky and Rav (Aimee-Ffion Edwards and Prasanna Puwanarajah). They want a quiet night in but instead find themselves beset with visits from family. Comparisons with Victoria Wood come to mind. "I've learnt to ignore him," says one character of another. "It's like getting a call on your landline. Or stretch marks." Samantha Spiro sparkles as Vicky's interfering mother Donna. simon o'hagan

Crowd Science

8.30pm BBC World Service While walking through a forest in Poland I was bitten to blazes by gnats that ignored my companions. Why? A Crowd Science listener in New Zealand is similarly confused. Sand flies target her and her daughter while leaving her husband and other daughter unscathed. There is as always in this fascinating series an answer. Insects like my blood but perhaps not yours because of semiochemicals - basically, smells. I shall be listening because I want to make myself smell really unpleasant.

Face behind the voice

Silverfinger Singh BBC Radio Leeds

Age 31 Current job Presents the Monday Mix Tape on BBC Radio Leeds (8pm), playing Asian fusion and desi roots music. He is also a musician and vocalist.

CV Born and raised in Leeds. Studied creative music and sound technology at Leeds Metropolitan. Worked at telecoms and broadcasting companies, as well as making podcasts, performing at events and releasing his own music. "When Yasser from BBC Asian Network called, asking me on his show to talk about my music, that was a massive moment!" Best moment "Completing my first show as an official broadcaster on Radio Leeds in November 2018... a dream come true! Worst moment "I've faced many tough challenges but none that I've not been able to overcome. Sure, listening to my earlier shows, there have been a few cringey moments when I've been a little over-excited – there's a lot of trial and error when you're learning the trade!" Off air "If I'm not spending time with my family or friends, I'll be locked away in the studio writing new songs and music. I try to make positive, empowering music, and

encourage young people to take up music themselves. I've been writing songs since I was 17/18. My new track Ekta (Punjabi for "unity") is out this month." First radio memory "I remember back in 2006 hearing Bobby Friction play my father's music on BBC Asian Network it was a real proud moment for our family. My dad is a tabla player/percussionist. and toured with Ian Brown – he was on Top of the Pops when he released My Star in 1998. I was in Year 6 at the time, and my teachers wouldn't believe me!" Favourite broadcasters "I love the likes of Bobby Friction, Nihal and Harpz Kaur on BBC Asian Network, but I always have time to listen to local presenters, such as Oly Woodcock, Russell Walker, Kofi Smiles." Ambition "To be the best I can be in any circumstance. I was raised to ensure every step is taken with the best intention." Dream job "I'm doing it now – to be broadcasting at the BBC is a truly great feeling. It feels like a dream when I'm working in the studios."

Secret skills "I don't think I keep any of my skills secret. From music production to laying down vocals, I put my heart into everything... And I can make you a nice northern cuppa, too!" CAROLINE MEYER

Face behind the voice

Silverfinger Singh BBC Radio Leeds

Age 31 Current job Presents the Monday Mix Tape on BBC Radio Leeds (8pm), playing Asian fusion and desi roots music. He is also a musician and vocalist.

CV Born and raised in Leeds. Studied creative music and sound technology at Leeds Metropolitan. Worked at telecoms and broadcasting companies, as well as making podcasts, performing at events and releasing his own music. "When Yasser from BBC Asian Network called, asking me on his show to talk about my music, that was a massive moment!" Best moment "Completing my first show as an official broadcaster on Radio Leeds in November 2018... a dream come true! Worst moment "I've faced many tough challenges but none that I've not been able to overcome. Sure, listening to my earlier shows, there have been a few cringev moments when I've been a little over-excited – there's a lot of trial and error when you're learning the trade!" Off air "If I'm not spending time with my family or friends, I'll be locked away in the studio writing new songs and music. I try to make positive, empowering music, and

encourage young people to take up music themselves. I've been writing songs since I was 17/18. My new track Ekta (Punjabi for "unity") is out this month." First radio memory "I remember back in 2006 hearing Bobby Friction play my father's music on BBC Asian Network it was a real proud moment for our family. My dad is a tabla player/percussionist. and toured with Ian Brown – he was on Top of the Pops when he released My Star in 1998. I was in Year 6 at the time, and my teachers wouldn't believe me!" Favourite broadcasters "I love the likes of Bobby Friction, Nihal and Harpz Kaur on BBC Asian Network, but I always have time to listen to local presenters, such as Oly Woodcock, Russell Walker, Kofi Smiles." Ambition "To be the best I can be in any circumstance. I was raised to ensure every step is taken with the best intention." Dream iob "I'm doing it now - to be broadcasting at the BBC is a truly great feeling. It feels like a dream when I'm working in the studios."

Secret skills "I don't think I keep any of my skills secret. From music production to laying down vocals, I put my heart into everything... And I can make you a nice northern cuppa, too!" CAROLINE MEYER

Face behind the voice

Silverfinger Singh BBC Radio Leeds

Age 31 Current job Presents the Monday Mix Tape on BBC Radio Leeds (8pm), playing Asian fusion and desi roots music. He is also a musician and vocalist.

CV Born and raised in Leeds. Studied creative music and sound technology at Leeds Metropolitan. Worked at telecoms and broadcasting companies, as well as making podcasts, performing at events and releasing his own music. "When Yasser from BBC Asian Network called, asking me on his show to talk about my music, that was a massive moment!" Best moment "Completing my first show as an official broadcaster on Radio Leeds in November 2018... a dream come true! Worst moment "I've faced many tough challenges but none that I've not been able to overcome. Sure, listening to my earlier shows, there have been a few cringey moments when I've been a little over-excited – there's a lot of trial and error when vou're learning the trade!" Off air "If I'm not spending time with my family or friends, I'll be locked away in the studio writing new songs and music. I try to make positive, empowering music, and encourage young people to take up music themselves. I've been writing songs since I was 17/18. My new track Ekta (Punjabi for "unity") is out this month." First radio memory "I remember back in 2006 hearing Bobby Friction play my father's music on BBC Asian Network it was a real proud moment for our family. My dad is a tabla player/percussionist. and toured with Ian Brown – he was on Top of the Pops when he released My Star in 1998. I was in Year 6 at the time, and my teachers wouldn't believe me!" Favourite broadcasters "I love the likes of Bobby Friction, Nihal and Harpz Kaur on BBC Asian Network, but I always have time to listen to local presenters, such as Oly Woodcock, Russell Walker, Kofi Smiles." Ambition "To be the best I can be in any circumstance. I was raised to ensure every step is taken with the best intention." Dream job "I'm doing it now – to be broadcasting at the BBC is a truly great feeling. It feels like a dream when I'm working in the studios."

Secret skills "I don't think I keep any of my skills secret. From music production to laying down vocals, I put my heart into everything... And I can make you a nice northern cuppa, too!" CAROLINE MEYER

Face behind the voice

Silverfinger Singh BBC Radio Leeds

Age 31 Current job Presents the Monday Mix Tape on BBC Radio Leeds (8pm), playing Asian fusion and desi roots music. He is also a musician and vocalist.

CV Born and raised in Leeds. Studied creative music and sound technology at Leeds Metropolitan. Worked at telecoms and broadcasting companies, as well as making podcasts, performing at events and releasing his own music. "When Yasser from BBC Asian Network called, asking me on his show to talk about my music, that was a massive moment!" Best moment "Completing my first show as an official broadcaster on Radio Leeds in November 2018... a dream come true! Worst moment "I've faced many tough challenges but none that I've not been able to overcome. Sure, listening to my earlier shows, there have been a few cringey moments when I've been a little over-excited – there's a lot of trial and error when you're learning the trade!" Off air "If I'm not spending time with my family or friends, I'll be locked away in the studio writing new songs and music. I try to make positive, empowering music, and

encourage young people to take up music themselves. I've been writing songs since I was 17/18. My new track Ekta (Punjabi for "unity") is out this month." First radio memory "I remember back in 2006 hearing Bobby Friction play my father's music on BBC Asian Network it was a real proud moment for our family. My dad is a tabla player/percussionist, and toured with Ian Brown – he was on Top of the Pops when he released My Star in 1998. I was in Year 6 at the time, and my teachers wouldn't believe me!" Favourite broadcasters "I love the likes of Bobby Friction, Nihal and Harpz Kaur on BBC Asian Network, but I always have time to listen to local presenters, such as Oly Woodcock, Russell Walker, Kofi Smiles." Ambition "To be the best I can be in any circumstance. I was raised to ensure every step is taken with the best intention." Dream job "I'm doing it now – to be broadcasting at the BBC is a truly great feeling. It feels like a dream when I'm working in the studios."

Secret skills "I don't think I keep any of my skills secret. From music production to laying down vocals, I put my heart into everything... And I can make you a nice northern cuppa, too!" CAROLINE MEYER

Face behind the voice

Silverfinger Singh BBC Radio Leeds

Age 31 Current job Presents the Monday Mix Tape on BBC Radio Leeds (8pm), playing Asian fusion and desi roots music. He is also a musician and vocalist.

CV Born and raised in Leeds. Studied creative music and sound technology at Leeds Metropolitan. Worked at telecoms and broadcasting companies, as well as making podcasts, performing at events and releasing his own music. "When Yasser from BBC Asian Network called, asking me on his show to talk about my music, that was a massive moment!" Best moment "Completing my first show as an official broadcaster on Radio Leeds in November 2018... a dream come true! Worst moment "I've faced many tough challenges but none that I've not been able to overcome. Sure, listening to my earlier shows, there have been a few cringey moments when I've been a little over-excited – there's a lot of trial and error when vou're learning the trade!" Off air "If I'm not spending time with my family or friends, I'll be locked away in the studio writing new songs and music. I try to make positive, empowering music, and

encourage young people to take up music themselves. I've been writing songs since I was 17/18. My new track Ekta (Punjabi for "unity") is out this month." First radio memory "I remember back in 2006 hearing Bobby Friction play my father's music on BBC Asian Network it was a real proud moment for our family. My dad is a tabla player/percussionist, and toured with Ian Brown – he was on Top of the Pops when he released My Star in 1998. I was in Year 6 at the time, and my teachers wouldn't believe me!" Favourite broadcasters "I love the likes of Bobby Friction, Nihal and Harpz Kaur on BBC Asian Network, but I always have time to listen to local presenters, such as Oly Woodcock, Russell Walker, Kofi Smiles." Ambition "To be the best I can be in any circumstance. I was raised to ensure every step is taken with the best intention." Dream job "I'm doing it now – to be broadcasting at the BBC is a truly great feeling. It feels like a dream when I'm working in the studios."

Secret skills "I don't think I keep any of laying down vocals, I put my heart into everything... And I can make you a nice northern cuppa, too!" CAROLINE MEYER

Face behind the voice

Silverfinger Singh BBC Radio Leeds

Age 31 Current job Presents the Monday Mix Tape on BBC Radio Leeds (8pm), playing Asian fusion and desi roots music. He is also a musician and vocalist.

CV Born and raised in Leeds. Studied creative music and sound technology at Leeds Metropolitan. Worked at telecoms and broadcasting companies, as well as making podcasts, performing at events and releasing his own music. "When Yasser from BBC Asian Network called, asking me on his show to talk about my music, that was a massive moment!" Best moment "Completing my first show as an official broadcaster on Radio Leeds in November 2018... a dream come true! Worst moment "I've faced many tough challenges but none that I've not been able to overcome. Sure, listening to my earlier shows, there have been a few cringey moments when I've been a little over-excited – there's a lot of trial and error when vou're learning the trade!" Off air "If I'm not spending time with my family or friends, I'll be locked away in the studio writing new songs and music. I try to make positive, empowering music, and

encourage young people to take up music themselves. I've been writing songs since I was 17/18. My new track Ekta (Punjabi for "unity") is out this month." First radio memory "I remember back in 2006 hearing Bobby Friction play my father's music on BBC Asian Network it was a real proud moment for our family. My dad is a tabla player/percussionist. and toured with Ian Brown – he was on Top of the Pops when he released My Star in 1998. I was in Year 6 at the time, and my teachers wouldn't believe me!" Favourite broadcasters "I love the likes of Bobby Friction, Nihal and Harpz Kaur on BBC Asian Network, but I always have time to listen to local presenters, such as Oly Woodcock, Russell Walker, Kofi Smiles." Ambition "To be the best I can be in any circumstance. I was raised to ensure every step is taken with the best intention." Dream job "I'm doing it now – to be broadcasting at the BBC is a truly great feeling. It feels like a dream when I'm working in the studios."

Secret skills "I don't think I keep anv of my skills secret. From music production to laying down vocals, I put my heart into everything... And I can make you a nice northern cuppa, too!" CAROLINE MEYER

What's your poison?

Follow Joe Fattorini's tips for choosing wine in a restaurant ou look at a sea of unfamiliar names. A sommelier, or wine waiter, with a grape-cluster badge pinned to their waistcoat hovers over your shoulder. You have to choose for everyone. Quickly. You point at the second cheapest wine on the list. The wine waiter snaps the list shut. "Excellent choice." You know they're lying.

"Choosing wine in a restaurant" regularly tops lists of things people dread. It's no surprise most of us avoid it. On average we spend less than ten seconds looking at the wine list before choosing. And choose the worst-value wine on it; the second cheapest.

You've got to have faith and ask?

With 50,000 wines on sale in Britain, even for me it's a stab in the dark. So here

If you're after a refreshing white, first, look out for grüner veltliner from Austria. It's the wine that sommeliers choose. If they've bought it for themselves, you know it'll be good. For a fuller white, go for dry furmint from Hungary. It sounds like a mad choice, but they're always good.

Pinot noir is a style of red that pleases most people, most of the time. Especially from Chile, New Zealand and South Africa. You'll get a classy wine that even works for the irritating friend who's insisted on choosing fish.

The wines are phenomenal value and they make delicious, tasty whites and chunky, fruity reds. The Rhône in France is home to the country's best-value wines; Sicily in Italy is littered with gems.

But for the absolute best choice, you've to got have faith and ask. You know the wines that you enjoy and you know what you want to spend – it's the wine waiter's job to tell you what fits the brief.

So if you like a ripe, full-bodied red or a fruity, unoaked white and you want to spend no more than... well, you choose, and ask what they recommend. Most sommeliers spend their lives waiting to be asked. A good wine waiter will open your eyes (and palate) to something delicious. Trust them.

ICHAEL CASHMAN'S AUTO-BIOGRAPHY, One of Them, covers his many claims to fame: child star, Stonewall founder, MEP, Labour peer who quit the party over anti-semitism. But for many he'll be remembered for the first gay kiss in a soap, in East-Enders in 1987. Now 69, Cashman smiles at the memory of the chaste peck his character, Colin, bestowed on his younger lover Barry's forehead.

"Putting my character and Barry into a show that was watched by 11 million-plus viewers per episode, at the time of the Aids and HIV crisis, was an amazing step for the BBC," he says. "When we did the kiss, right-wing politicians and the press went berserk. But it was a crucial moment in the depiction of same-sex relationships. It broke the mould." However, when Colin kissed another lover full on the lips some years later, it still caused a stir (see inset, far right).

Cashman's belief in the inevitability of progress when it comes to tolerance and human and civil rights may have taken a few knocks in the past three years. But he's surely right that Colin's kiss paved the way for the lesbian smooth on Brookside (1994), and the eventual arrival of series such as Queer as Folk (1999) and The L Word (2004). It helped, Cashman adds, that Colin was so ordinary: "At times he was so boring he'd fade into magnolia walls."

One couldn't say the same of Cashman. A Rotherhithe docker's son, he had a precocious awareness of his sexuality and his desire to perform: his father warned him showbiz was "full of queers". At 11 he was in Oliver!, which set him on a successful path as an actor.

IS EARLY YEARS were full of abuse. He was raped twice, once as a child and then later by the straight friend of a lover. His parents seemingly turned a blind eye to his molestation, while still underage, by his "manager" Woodie. Lecherous directors regarded him as fair game. His boyfriends pretended to be straight in public. Cashman was 17 when homosexualilty was legalised for those over 21, in 1967.

One of Them is no misery memoir, though, but an extraordinary account of improbable leaps of

At 25, Cashman was playing lead roles on TV and had just missed out to Robin Askwith to star in the Confessionsfilms. He gave it all up and took a bunch o f science A-levels in an ultimately failed attempt to become a doctor. "A lucky escape for the NHS," he says.

> On his return to acting, an encounter with the legendary literary agent Peggy Ramsay led him to write two plays for Alan Ayckbourn while performing for his troupe in Scarborough. One day Cashman noticed a photo of a dishy redcoat, Paul Cottingham, outside > > the local Butlin's. Three days later, Barbara Windsor introduced them at her birthday party.

The two were together for 31 years, until Cottingham's death from a rare cancer, angiosarcoma, in 2014, eight years after they'd entered a civil partnership. Cashman had been instrumental in persuading Tony Blair to bring in the legislation, and the book details his and Cottingham's growing political activism. Cashman and Ian McKellen set up Stonewall after failing to prevent the anti-gay Section 28 - which banned the "promotion" of homosexuality in schools from passing into law; and Cashman was gradually persuaded to take a more active role in politics by his and Cottingham's friends Neil and Glenys Kinnock.

What prompted him to write the book? "Paul's death," he answers instantly. "When he died I wanted to set down the life that I had had before him and the life that I had because of him." Theirs was an amazing, complicated love story. Early on, they worked out that they wanted the freedom to see other people – jointly or separately – but they should always go home together. Cashman is more honest about sex than most memoirists, gay or straight.

"Other people know about our open relationship, so if I didn't talk about it and the struggles he and I had with it, what would be the point?" Cashman says. "Our relationship was not only emotionally committed through those 31 years, but physically as well. He taught me the difference between love and sex." Although the grief gets easier to handle, he doesn't think he will ever engage emotionally with another partner.

Writing the book has been cathartic, enabling him finally to confront the abuse of his youth, the complications of his partnership and his fraught relationship with his parents. His father was wounded in the Second World War and imprisoned - presumed dead, until his mother's father, who lived in the council flat upstairs, heard him mentioned in a broadcast by Nazi propagandist Lord Haw-Haw. Cashman's mother was so rebellious that her mother once hit her with a saucepan and her where she escaped in a bread van. Married after Cashman's mother fell pregnant with the first of four sons, they stayed together despite a seemingly chronic lack of affection.

What would they have thought of his ennoblement as a life peer? "They were always slightly baffled by what I did, but for my dad it would

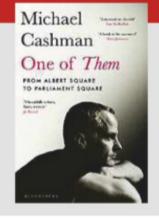

When Paul died I wanted to set down the life I had because of him⁹ have been a very proud moment," he says. Though he now sits in the House of Lords as an independent, Cashman desperately hopes someone can unite the Labour party. "I'm in despair over Brexit, which has exposed a mean underbelly I thought had disappeared," he says. "But I'm a born-again optimist, and I do believe things will get better if we have the courage to defend what we have." NICK CURTIS

A LONG PETAL OF THE SEA

ISABEL ALLENDE Open Book Sunday 4pm Radio 4

Isabel Allende was nearly 40 before she wrote her first book, but since magical-realist masterpiece House of the Spirits was published in 1982, she's been prolific, writing 19 novels that have sold over 65 million copies. Her latest, A Long Petal of the Sea (£16.50, incl p&p), opens during the Spanish Civil War and follows Victor and his wife Roser, as they flee Franco's regime for Chile. It's based on the life of Allende's friend, Victor Pey Casado – but sadly he didn't live to see his story published. He died in October 2018 at the age of 103, just days before the novel was completed.

THE STRANGER HARLAN COBEN

If you watched The Five, the 2016 Sky 1 thriller centred on a group of friends attempting to unravel a 20-year-old mystery, you'll know

Harlan Coben, the show's writer, can spin a good yarn. He's also a novelist, with 31 titles to his name, including The Stranger (£8.99 plus £1.50 p&p), which has become an eight-part Netflix drama. It stars Richard Armitage as a man whose perfect life and family is thrown into chaos by a mysterious woman, who knows a secret about his wife... The Stranger isn't the only Coben adaptation currently on our screens – Just One Look, a six-part French production originally made in 2017, airs on Fridays on More4.

FUNERAL PLANS - A LITTLE CERTAINTY IN UNCERTAIN TIMES

How a Dignity funeral plan can help you and your loved ones

There's never an ideal time to talk about your send-off. However, planning your funeral in advance makes financial sense. Just 40% of people have made sufficient provisions to cover the full cost of their funeral when the time comes. And for 12% of families, finding the money to pay for a funeral has caused notable financial problems.

A funeral plan could make planning your send-off that little bit easier. By planning in advance, you will have peace of mind, knowing that your family won't have the burden of meeting the cost of the services covered by your plan, and all the details in the plan will be taken care of.

Radio Times has teamed up with Dignity, one of the UK's leading funeral plan providers to help you get the send-off you want. Dignity have already helped over 910,000* people plan for their funeral in advance and will be there for the ones you love, when they need it most.

Why choose the Dignity Prepaid Funeral Plan?

The Dignity Prepaid Funeral Plan allows you to pay for your funeral in advance – once paid for, you will never pay more for the services included in the plan, however far in the future the plan is needed. The Prepaid Funeral Plan from Dignity is a simple way of taking control of your affairs, protecting against future increases in funeral costs and providing peace of mind for everyone concerned.

Beware the ISA penalty clause

Lifetime ISAs can help first-time home-buyers, says Paul Lewis, but there is a catch...

F YOUR GROWN-UP children want to buy their first home, saving for the deposit is usually the first step. There is a simple way to get the Government to boost whatever they save. It is called a Lifetime ISA (LISA).

As with all ISAs, any interest or growth is tax-free. But the big plus of a Lifetime ISA is that the Treasury adds another 25 per cent on to what the saver puts in. That subsidy does come with a downside: if the money is taken out for the wrong reason – anything other than a deposit for a first home costing up to £450,000 with a repayment mortgage – then the Government snatches back the subsidy plus a bit extra.

The arithmetic works like this. The saver puts in, say, £80. The Treasury boosts that by 25 per cent, which is another £20, so there is £100 in the LISA. If the saver then withdraws the £100 for the wrong reason the Treasury takes back 25 per cent of the amount taken out, which is £25, leaving just £75 of the original £80. So the saver has not only lost the subsidy of £20 but also an extra fiver, which is effectively a fine of 6.25 per cent of the money saved.

A Freedom of Information request recently revealed that a total of £9 million had been taken back by the Treasury from people with a Lifetime ISA who had withdrawn their money and not used it to help buy a first home. Most of that £9 million was the Treasury subsidy given in the first place, but nearly £2 million was the extra penalty.

open a Lifetime ISA and they can pay into it until they reach 50. The maximum contribution is £4,000 a year, to which the Treasury will add 25 per cent, up to a maximum of £1,000 a year. No one else can pay into the LISA, but there's nothing to stop parents or others giving money to the saver so they can put more into it. Not all banks and building societies offer LISAs and the amount that goes in counts towards the total £20,000 a year that can be put into ISAs.

ARE HOLIDAY CAR HIRE COMPANIES ALLOWED TO CHARGE OLDER DRIVERS MORE?

"My husband and I regularly visit Cyprus," emailed Di. Her 71-year-old husband is "fit and healthy with a clean driving licence". But on their last trip they hired a car and were "suddenly hit with an additional daily charge based on age alone. It doubled the cost of our rental. Was it is a scam?"

Paul Lewis replies: Many car hire firms do discriminate against older people by raising the cost at a certain age, which can be as low as 70. Some car hire firms even refuse to rent a car to people over that age. It is because insurers say there is a higher risk of accidents among older people.

Before booking a hire car, you should always ask about age discrimination and find a firm that does not impose extra charges on older people.

In the UK, firms are not allowed to discriminate on grounds of age when they provide goods or services unless they can show a good reason for it. That includes evidence that older people are a higher risk. Age discrimination laws in the EU only apply to employment.

ULE NUMBER ONE: Don't let go," says the musher cheerfully, as she harnesses four wolfish-looking huskies to my sled. It immediately jerks forward as the dogs jump and caper. Unlike me, they're raring to go. When I booked dogsledding at Sky High Wilderness Ranch, I imagined I'd be doing nothing more taxing than trying not to fall off, but we've each been given our own sled to drive. Our no-nonsense musher, Jocelyne, tries and fails to reassure us: "It's like downhill skiing - but with no ski lift."

Suddenly we're off, and I'm clinging on for dear life as Amber, Wilbur, Zia and Ed plunge into the woods, dragging me behind. Jocelyn leads the way and the dogs follow, clearly knowing the drill. When I press too hard on the brake, they obediently stop but look back at me as if to say, "Amateur!

I relax and begin to enjoy gliding through a winter wonderland. We race along the shore of a frozen lake, under a sky painted yellow and silver to Canada's westernmost territory - the Yukon - to follow in the tracks of one of literature's unluckiest dogs: Buck, the star of Jack London's bestselling 1903 novella Call of the Wild, and now the hero of a big-budget movie starring Harrison Ford (in cinemas from Wednesday 19 February). It's set during the Klondike Gold Rush of the late 1890s, when 100,000 would-be millionaires embarked on a perilous 600-mile journey from the Alaskan coast to the goldfields in the Yukon. Only around 30,000 made it, and very few struck it lucky.

As for poor Buck, he's kidnapped from his Californian home, shipped to the wilds of Alaska, sold to a mail delivery dog-sled team and suffers at the hands of callous masters. I'm assured modern mushers are a different breed and adore > their dogs, and Amber, Wilbur, Zia and Ed certainly seem brighteyed, bushy-tailed and delighted to be chaperoning me.

Although it's off-grid and feels like the back of beyond, the ranch is only 30 minutes from the Yukon's capital, Whitehorse, a two-and-a-half-hour flight from Vancouver. The territory is Canada's least-populated region – most of its 35,000 inhabitants live in Whitehorse. The rest is largely wilderness.

BOOM TOWN

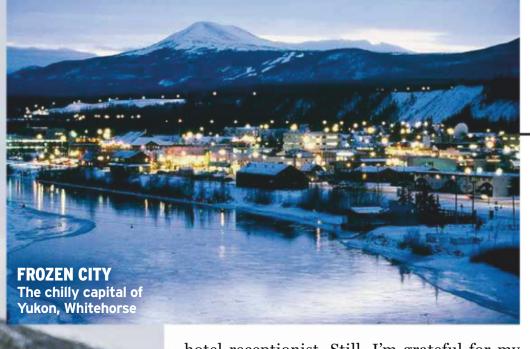

From Whitehorse, we venture north to the epicentre of the Klondike Gold Rush, Dawson City. By 1898, it was one of the biggest cities in North America and nicknamed "Paris of the North" because you could get everything from haute couture to champagne and oysters. Its heyday only lasted a year, and most of the gold diggers soon moved on.

During the seven-hour drive, we don't pass a single town, but do spy bald eagles and two coyotes gambolling through the powdery snow. The iceencrusted forest grows thin as we cruise along the highway, then disappears altogether behind a thick blanket of fog and we arrive in the midst of a blizzard.

Dawson City is 280 miles below the Arctic Circle; the temperature can get down to -40°C in winter, and the Yukon River is frozen for eight months of the year. When I visit, it's -11°C, which is unseasonably warm, according to the hotel receptionist. Still, I'm grateful for my rented snow pants, parka, boots and mittens as I plod along the snowy wooden boardwalks.

Hemmed in by peaks, Dawson still feels like a frontier town, and looks like an abandoned film set. Its brightly painted wooden buildings still have boom-town names: Diamond Tooth Gertie's Gambling Hall, Bombay Peggy's, Red Feather Saloon. Some look like they've had a couple of whiskies too many, such as the crooked church and lopsided Kissing Buildings – an abandoned hardware store and hotel.

A replica of Jack London's cheerless log cabin has an inscription on the wall: "Jack London – author, miner, January 27, 1898". When he carved it, the penniless young man was neither. Like his canine protagonist in Call of the Wild, his only winter in the Yukon was tough. He developed scurvy and had lost his four front teeth by the time he returned to California after nine months, with only $6.50 of gold in his pocket. He had hit the jackpot, though: his misadventures in the north inspired many of the tales that brought him fame and riches.

Nowadays visitors pan for gold in Bonanza Creek and do tours of its defunct dredge, but small familyowned companies still dig in the hills. Along with tourism, goldmining is the main industry.

FROZEN TOE COCKTAIL

On my final night in Dawson City, I find myself ordering Sourdough

Saloon's infamous Sourtoe Cocktail: a tumbler of liquor of your choice with a long, black, preserved human toe. Legend has it that the original toe belonged to a rum-runner who had to chop off his frostbitten toe with an axe and preserved it in a jar of rum. Over the years, other amputees have donated their severed toes to the Sourtoe Cocktail Club.

"You can drink it fast, you can drink it slow, but your lips must touch the gnarled toe," says the bartender with convincing menace.

I knock back my whiskey and kiss the curling nail, telling myself I got off lightly in Canada's wild west compared to the unfortunate rumrunner, and Jack London. CLAIRE WEBB

Word of the Week - haplography

Most of us have been guilty at some point of writing "mispell" instead of "misspell", or perhaps "Missippi" for "Mississippi". In linguistics, the accidental omission of a letter or word > when it should occur twice in close proximity is called haplography. The word is a combination of the Greek haplo, "single", and graphy, "writing", and it describes an error that is easily made. You might write, "Is there anyone I can talk to resolve this issue?", for example, instead of, "Is there anyone I can talk to to resolve this issue?"

A close cousin of haplography is haplology. This is what happens when we "eat" part of a word when saying it: "secetry", for example, for "secretary", or "probly" for "probably". We're particularly guilty of this when the full spelling is quite difficult to get out.

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Why not take the plunge?

What a lovely duo Hugh Fearnley-Whittingstall and Steph McGovern made in Easy Ways to Live Well (BBC1): Hugh, the éminence grise of the eco movement, struggling to get us off single-use plastic and championing good environmental causes; and Steph, whose easy-going charm belies her northern powerhouse personality.

As I gingerly took the plunge in my local swimming pool, I thought of Hugh taking an icy outdoor dip and told myself not to be a wuss. It helped me to enjoy my swim. Such programmes, as well as being entertaining, are educational, and can inspire us to try something new.

RED-BUTTON REPRIEVE

Many congratulations to the successful campaigners for the reprieve of the BBC red button text service. Many, many people can feel elated that their voices have been listened to. The red button is too important to so many.

Jack Chantry Doncaster,

South Yorkshire As the BBC announces big cuts, Culture Secretary Nicky Morgan launched a "consultation" on whether non-payment of the licence fee should no longer be a criminal offence (go to gov.uk/government/ consultations to take part). RT will be seeking your views, so watch out for our Feedback survey.

POWER OF ART...

My husband took up his pencil and followed the excellent live tuition on Life Drawing Live! (4 February BBC4.) He has had post-surgery depression and has found it hard to paint, but this ground-breaking live TV brought his artistic talent out of the shadows. I cannot praise the programme-makers enough.

Nina MacPherson Bath

...OR SPLIT DECISION

It could have been the ultimate in Slow TV, except the BBC overcomplicated it by having a "Pose Cam". Unless you have a Smart TV, you needed to look at the models on your computer, tablet or phone, excluding those without the technology.

And trying to draw and watch the programme wouldn't have allowed you to do justice to either. Martin and Mary Taylor Petworth, West Sussex

DO NOT ENJOY

I was surprised by an anachronism in a recent episode of Call the Midwife (2 February BBC1). "Enjoy!" was used both by the fish-and-chip stallholder to Dr Turner and his wife and by the Mallens as they saw the staff of Nonnatus House leaving for the cinema. This expression was certainly not in use in 1965.

"Enjoy yourselves" would have been more likely, or "I hope you enjoy them" of the fish and chips. Alan Cox Northwich, Cheshire

UNNECESSARY CASUALTY

As I would expect from a BBC drama, Casualty (Saturdays BBC1) handled the story of Duffy's dementia with great sensitivity. Nevertheless, following her final exit (1 February), I'm more annoyed than moved. Why bring her back just a few years ago only to write her out? I do understand that putting a beloved character at the centre of this story gave it maximum emotional impact, but I wish another way had been found to tell it without sacrificing Duffy. I will miss her.

Anthony Musgrave Oxted, Surrey

TOO HORRIFIC

Domestic violence is a serious problem, but Coronation Street have taken the Geoff and Yasmeen storyline too far: the 5 February episode [when he locked her in a box] was horrific. A soap is supposed to be an entertainment, not a documentary. Let's hope they bring this story to a close.

Joyce Davis Edgware, north-west London This abuse storyline is dividing opinion among Corrie fans. Let us know if you feel it's serving an important purpose.

SO WRONG IT'S RIGHT

I applaud The Goes Wrong Show (BBC1) for bringing back broad farce to television: the timing and delivery of their slapstick and tomfoolery were exemplary.

My wife and I enjoyed many belly laughs, as did our seven-yearold grandson, and it was great to find a programme aimed at adults that was also appropriate for children. More, please.

Nick Forward

Redditch, Worcestershire

CHRIS MAKES ME CRY

Winterwatch (28-31 January BBC2) was four days of magic from the Cairngorms. Chris Packham and the team > to delight in making us feel part of their excitement and surprise as they shared fascinating facts and inspired us to love every > > tiny part of the natural world.

> > The brilliant photography elicited wows, oohs and the odd tear. I always feel so sad when a Watch series draws to a close, and the end to this one was timely and moving. We were reminded: "We're in a crisis... we have to act now, all of us" for our planet to continue to be "the most beautiful place in our universe".

Janet Hoptroff

Rustington, West Sussex

BRILLIANT DRAMA

I'd like to say how much I enjoyed White House Farm (ITV). Although we know the ending of this true-crime drama, the acting has been brilliant.

Jeremy Bamber was played so well by Freddie Fox, and Mark Addy was excellent as the detective who wouldn't give up. I can see him in a series similar to Vera. Louise Crosby Oldham

TRIBUTES TO NICHOLAS

My wife and I loved Just a Minute (Radio 4), along with our two children. When they were aged ten and eight, we played our own version, taking it in turns to be Nicholas Parsons. On one occasion I recorded one of these sessions, which is now a treasured cassette.

I thank him for all the joy he and his wonderful guests gave us over so many years, and in particular for his contribution towards my family bonding. Never in the history of radio joy has so much been owed by so many for so long to the one who presented it: Nicholas Parsons.

Michael Windsor-Richards Attleborough,

Norfolk

...What a lovely surprise programme on Saturday 1 February when BBC2 repeated Len Goodman's 2017 Holiday of My Lifetime interview with Nicholas Parsons. He will be much missed.

Margaret Brown

Via email This was a late change to the schedule. If you missed it, you can catch up at bbc.co.uk/iplayer until the end of February - and also find My Life on a Plate (Parsons talks food with chef Ben Turner) and The Incredible Story of Marie Antoinette's Watch (on his passion IEMORIES Nicholas Parsons with Len Goodman in 2017's Holiday of a Lifetime for timepieces). You can still enjoy hearing him on Just a Minute at BBC Sounds.

A SHARP TURN

I was very sorry to read that Rhod Sharp will be stepping down as the presenter of 5 Live's Up All Night in April, after 26 years. He is the best interviewer, as far as I'm concerned. He doesn't try to score points, lets people finish what they're saying and asks intelligent questions. He is always polite and cheerful, and gives us listeners such a welcome. If I wake during the night, we get such good items, on science as well as current affairs.

> I do wish him well for whatever he's planned.

We will miss him. Ann Rolinson

Woking, Surrey Rhod Sharp, who $broadcasts\ from$ 1am on Mondays to Wednesdays from his home in Massachusetts, tells RT: "It comes to us all.

I've had such wonderful, loyal listeners and could never sufficiently repay them for their encouragement and support.

RHOD'S POD

A change of tack

for Rhod Sharp

"I would never have thought I could have done this for so long, but it just seemed natural, and after very little time I couldn't think what else I would rather do. Now I'm going to take a moment (not a very long one) and then try my hand at podcasting. It might not be the end of my involvement with live radio, which I love. Never say never again - I suppose that's what Ian Fleming might have written of a radio presenter."

INSPIRED PAIRING

Plaudits to Joanna Lumley and Roger Allam, bringing us Jan Etherington's witty and perceptive comedy series, Conversations from a Long Marriage (Radio 4). No doubt it struck a chord with many people. In spite of the sometimes petty altercations, one knows the partnership is based on genuine care for each other and will endure. This inspired pairing brightened my day. Another series, please. Dora Alker Folkestone, Kent ▷

YOU ASK US

What's next for Stephen Graham?

Seeing The Irishman on Netflix recently reminded me what a terrific actor Stephen Graham is. What will we see him in next?

Rob Baker, Manchester
Having played a tormented ghost in A Christmas Carol, the Line of Duty star has another dark role in the pipeline: he's been filming BBC2's four-part period drama The North Water, based on the 2016 novel by lan McGuire. Graham plays ship's captain Brownlee, who in the 1850s sails the Volunteer, a whaler on an expedition to the Arctic. Colin Farrell plays a violent harpooner.

Cast and crew had to brave the ice floes of Svalbard, far north of Norway, which made a profound impression on Graham. He has said: "Filming on the ship was an incredible experience and one I will never forget. To be so privileged to see such beautiful animals like polar bears in their natural habitat – albeit an ever-changing one, sadly – was truly remarkable."

AUSTRIAN ADDICT

the outstandingly entertaining drama Vienna Blood (BBC2)? Derick Oakham, Ryde, Isle of Wight A BBC spokesperson responds: "We're delighted to hear that you

Will there be another series of enjoyed Vienna Blood so much. As it is an acquired series, we are waiting to hear from the distributor about whether there will be a second series available, but we certainly hope so."

JOIN JEREMY CLARKSON

A new series of the quiz Who Wants to Be a Millionaire? – the sixth to be hosted by Jeremy Clarkson – will be filmed this spring and Radio Times readers are invited to apply. Initially you have to complete an application online, which involves answering 20 quiz questions. How you score will determine whether you make it through to the next stage – which will involve answering additional quiz questions, posed by the casting team, over the telephone.

Final auditions, we're told, will be held by the producers, over Skype – and if you make it as far as filming, that will be in April and/or May at Media City in Salford.

Travel expenses to Manchester will be paid and, who knows, it could be a life-changing trip...

To apply, go to: itv.com/beontv/shows/whowantstobeamillionaire (terms and conditions are on the website). You must be 18 or over, and applications close at 11.59pm on Monday 30 March. Good luck!

□ DEFENDING THE FAITH

I enjoyed the letter about Vera's "battered old Land Rover" (Feedback, 1 February) as I've been driving the same Land Rover Defender for more than 20 years and it's part of the family. It may not be as quick as a police car with a blue light but it suits Vera's character in the series.

The Defender will still be rumbling along when most modern cars have long gone to be recycled. This workhorse has its own magic, so "crack on, Vera" – it is a pleasure to watch.

Pam Harrison St Helens, Merseyside

WHO'S IN THE FRAME?

Shock of the Nude with Mary Beard (3 February BBC2) was a lovely documentary and it was a joy to see the evolution of the naked art form. But once upon a time it wasn't always necessary to look at the presenter explaining the subject. I wish modern presenters would stand to one side – I'm not interested in what they look like.

NOT SO SILENT AFTER ALL

In Silent Witness (28 January BBC1) I noticed that Max Thorndyke (played by Daniel Weyman) was reading a Peter James book, Dead at First Sight, the latest in the Roy Grace series. I have several of these novels in print and audiobook form, the latter of which are read by Daniel Weyman! Needless to say, I think both the novels and the reader are excellent.

View from my sofa

KELLIE BRIGHT

'Linda looks like Barbie...'

...but inside she's made of steel, says the EastEnders star

What's the view from your sofa?

I've got a pink sofa, which sounds very Linda Carter, but it's nice! My dog's at my feet, my husband [actor Paul Stocker] is next to me, and I'm watching Danny Dyer's old TV, which he gave to me.

And what's on the box?

We're watching You on Netflix, and Succession. I loved Fleabag and Killing Eve – drama with women at the forefront, which is lovely. I also like to watch the news – otherwise, between work and being a mum, I can live in a bit of a bubble.

Is it hard to find shows to watch with your sons (eight and three)?

It's quite difficult but we all love Ninja Warrior UK, and I watch CBeebies with my youngest. The new Batman is quite scary, so I downloaded the Adam West ones from the 60s; my oldest loves them.

What makes you turn off the TV? I don't watch a lot of reality, but I do watch Strictly when that's on.

You competed with Kevin Clifton in 2015. What's it like watching him with new partners?

Aww, I always root for him. When he won with Stacey Dooley I burst into tears and left him a message where I could barely speak. I've met her and she's lovely.

It's EastEnders' 35th birthday; do you remember the first episode?

Vividly! I remember sitting down with my mum and dad when I was eight. We were super-fans. Sue Tully was brilliant as Michelle and I loved Angie. My first executive-producer, Dominic Treadwell-Collins, said to me that the show is about strong women and it's true. Even though Linda looks like Barbie, inside she's made of steel.

Is it true you had a part in EastEnders back in 1986?

I was a guest at Michelle and Lofty's wedding! We were waiting for Michelle to turn up and I had to pull my mum's sleeve and ask to go to the toilet. The show was so huge then, they filmed three different endings so viewers wouldn't find out whether Michelle turns up or not.

Your current storyline features

Linda's descent into alcoholism. How has that been?

I was terrified when they told me! Acting drunk is one of the hardest things to get right. It's like taking all your clothes off: you feel very vulnerable and exposed. You have to be brave and get rid of any thoughts of what you look like or what anyone thinks of you. Not that I'm precious about that stuff anyway. You should see me on the school run! The mums know if I've been in work because I've got full hair and make-up looking perfect, which is not "me".

about the stillness between the ranting. You kind of zone out when you're drunk, so that's what I wanted to capture.

How do you unwind after work?
I'm Mrs Stocker at home, and the two names help me keep my work and private life separate. It can be hard because my children are only small; the youngest can get upset if he hasn't seen Mummy for a long time – and I get upset, too! But the great thing about How did you get into character?

I watched a lot of footage of real people, drunk, on YouTube. It's EastEnders is that they work you hard for a few weeks, then they let you have some respite.

SPAIN'S UNMISSABLE MOORISH MONUMENTS • JEWELS OF THE MED RadioTimes 8 PAGES OF TRIPS TO REMEMBER From the beauty of Andalucía to the perfection of Pompeii, take in Europe's greatest sights IN ASSOCIATION radiotimes.com/riviera

Visit the breathtaking medinas, mosques and citadels of southern Spain

a spine-tingling sight, especially at sunset

when its fortifications glow orange. Perched on a crag and framed by the mountains of the Sierra Nevada, it was converted into a royal residence in the mid-13th century and the Nasrid dynasty built exquisite palaces within its towering ramparts.

Following the Christian conquest of the Moors in 1492, the Alhambra was revamped by the Hapsburg Emperor Charles V, who added an immense palace and Renaissance flourishes. Fortunately, he couldn't bring himself to destroy the sultans' geometrically designed, intricately decorated palaces. The Palacios Nazaríes are still spellbinding, as are the sumptuous gardens of their summer residence.

The old Moorish quarter of the city, El Albaicín, is enchanting, too: a maze of twisting alleyways with spectacular views of the fortress.

IN THE MIDDLE Ages, a sophisticated Arab-Andalucían civilisation ruled much of the Iberian peninsula. Their realm was known as al-Andalus, and Spain's sun-baked south was its western frontier for nearly eight centuries.

The Moors left behind Europe's loveliest Islamic architecture and their cultural influence shaped Andalucía long after they were finally defeated by the Catholic King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella.

Seville's Alcázar is a breathtaking royal palace blending Christian and Mudéjar architecture, with graceful gardens and dainty plasterwork. Córdoba has an astonishing mosque-cathedral, while the port city of Almería is home to Spain's largest Moorish citadel. Granada was their last outpost, and where they built the sublime Alhambra.

And all are within easy reach...

Seductive Seville

The Alcázar of Seville was largely built in the 12th century under the North African Almohad dynasty, but their Catholic conquerors added to it. The magnificent Palacio de Rey Don Pedro was built by a Christian king who was fond of Islamic architecture and so employed the craftsmen of his Muslim neighbour, the emir of Granada. One hall has a glittering cedarwood cupola inlaid with tiny mirrors and the serene centrepiece is the Courtyard of the Maidens - a sunken pool encircled by delicate arches and star-patterned tiles.

Seville's gigantic Gothic cathedral is also a marriage of the two faiths that have shaped Spain's southernmost region: its yellow-brick bell tower was originally the minaret of a mosque.

Southern Spain on screen

GAME OF THRONES

Seville's Alcázar (right) was the scene of a bloody coup in Game of Thrones. The fantasy drama also filmed at the ruins of the nearby Roman city of Italica, where an amphitheatre doubled as a dragon pit.

WONDER WOMAN Game of Thrones also decamped to Almería's Alcazaba. Its mighty fortress popped up in Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade and will have a cameo in upcoming superhero film Wonder Woman 1984.

STAR WARS Seville's Plaza de España appeared in the Star Wars prequel Attack of the Clones (right). This vast, neo-Moorish square has a crescent of tiled alcoves, each of them representing one of the ancient kingdoms of Spain.

THE CROWN Much of series three of The Crown was filmed in the Costa del Sol's 1960s buildings. For example, Torremolinos's convention centre stood in for Los Angeles airport.

SPAGHETTI WESTERNS In the 60s and 70s, more than a hundred spagnetti westerns, such as The Good, the Bad and the Ugly and A Fistful of Dollars, were filmed in the Tabernas Desert in Almería province. The Escape from Fort Bravo movie set is now a western-style theme park. CW

Incredible Córdoba

Often overlooked by tourists, Córdoba was once the centre of Islamic Spain and Western Europe's most sophisticated city. Its star attraction is a mosque propped up by hundreds of stripy horseshoe arches that stretch on and on in stark symmetry. After the Christian conquest of the city in 1236, the Mezquita was used as a cathedral and King Carlos V gave permission for dozens of its marble pillars to be ripped up so an ostentatious church could be built in the middle. According to legend, he regretted authorising it, admonishing the builders: "You have destroyed something unique in the world to build something you could have put up anywhere."

Córdoba's medieval treasures don't end there. Its alcázar was overhauled by the Catholic kings and used as the headquarters of the Inquisition, but it still has a Moorish bathhouse and delightful gardens.

On the outskirts of the city, the Medina Azahara ("Shining City"), built by Abd-al Rahman III, once housed thousands of people and is Spain's largest archaeological site. Although it was largely destroyed in 1010 during the civil wars of al-Andalus, you still get a sense of its brief heyday as you stroll amid the ruins under its stucco arches. No visit to Córdoba would be complete > without a wander around its old Moorish and Jewish districts, where geraniums and sweet-smelling jasmine spill from wroughtiron balconies and whitewashed winding lanes reveal lush hidden plazas.

(meria's

The powerful caliph Abd al-Rahman III also built a massive clifftop fortress in the port of Almería (the Arabic, Al Mariyat, means "mirror of the sea"). In the Middle Ages, the port was so prosperous that locals used to boast: "When Almería was Almería, Granada was merely its farm."

The 1,000-year-old citadel, the Alcazaba, has chunky walls and towers that still dominate the city's skyline. The interior may lack the spectacular tiles and decorations of the Alhambra, but there are immaculate gardens, the ruins of the emirs' palace and a Catholic castle to explore. The battlements command views fit for a sultan: across tiny rooftops in the picturesque old fishermen's quarter to the deep-blue Mediterranean Sea. CLAIRE WEBB

Mediterranean Magic There's more to the Med than sun, sea and sangria.

Here are some locations with that little something extra...

HE MEDITERRANEAN IS an open-air museum showcasing the wonders of southern Europe's trailblazing civilisations, and these five manmade marvels cannot fail to impress. Sicily's Valley of the Temples was dreamt up by the ancient Greeks, Avignon's aweinspiring papal palace is testament to the might of the Catholic Church, and Pompeii is a Roman city frozen in time. Dubrovnik is Croatia's most enchanting historic destination, while the ruins of the ancient city of Butrint are a hidden gem in Albania.

Home of the gods SICILY'S VALLEY OF THE TEMPLES. ITALY

The honey-hued temples scattered across an arid hilltop on Sicily's south coast are around 2,500 years old and were once the centrepieces of the powerful Greek city of Akragas - now known as Agrigento. They're still an awesome sight, especially the amazingly wellpreserved Temple of Concordia, the Temple of Olympian Zeus's colossal human statues and the Temple of Hera's long sacrificial altar. The island's hoard of Greek treasures also includes a temple incorporated into a cathedral with an elegant Baroque façade in Syracuse, and a huge amphitheatre overlooking the city, which was home to Archimedes.

Where faith meets power

AVIGNON'S PAPAL PALACE, FRANCE

In the 14th century, Pope Clement V transferred papal power to France to avoid violent unrest in Rome. His successors built Europe's largest Gothic palace in Avignon, and it's still guarded by menacing ramparts. You can visit the Palais des Papes' cavernous ceremonial rooms, frescosmothered chapels and the Pope's private chambers, which include a bedroom painted with frolicking birds and squirrels, and a study adorned with secular hunting and fishing scenes. In the summer, there's an impressive nightly son et lumière show in the main courtyard. Avignon is also famous for its half-collapsed medieval bridge, immortalised in the folk song Sur le pont d'Avignon.

exiled hero Aeneas visit it in his epic poem, the Aeneid. Buthrotum was founded more than 2,700 years ago as a Greek colony by the Corinthians, and subsequently shaped by invading Romans, Byzantines, Angevins, Normans, Venetians and Ottoman Turks, making it a microcosm of the Med's tumultuous history. Among its ruins are a Greek theatre and a sixth century AD baptistry with a beautiful mosaic floor that's often covered in sand to protect it.

The setting is wonderfully romantic – on the shores of a saltwater lagoon, hidden by forest.

is found in a suburb of Naples: a wealthy Roman city that was buried under ash and pumice when Mount Vesuvius erupted in AD 79, killing 2,000 of its citizens. You can explore houses, cafés, shops, temples and brothels, and spot ancient graffiti as well as mosaics and frescos. There are even plaster casts of the volcano's luckless victims - fleeing men, women and children frozen at the moment of their untimely deaths. Walled wonder

Wedged between hills and azure sea, and encircled by thick ramparts, the walled city of Dubrovnik has been enchanting travellers for centuries - Lord Byron proclaimed it the "pearl of the Adriatic". In the Middle Ages, it was the wealthy capital of the maritime republic of Ragusa. The city had a makeover following a catastrophic earthquake in the 17th century, and its limestone streets are lined with Baroque churches and palazzo-museums crammed with art. Away from the thoroughfares, narrow lanes climb past sleepy green-shuttered houses that have barely changed in centuries. CLAIRE WEBB
