English Grammar Review

This section provides a review of the main elements of English grammar.

THE PARTS OF SPEECH

This dictionary identifies the eight traditional parts of speech. We will look at each of them in turn.

Nouns

Nouns, the largest class of words in English (and in most languages), are the names of things, people, animals, places, qualities, actions, and ideas. A noun that refers to one of these is singular; while a noun that refers to more than one of these is plural. A noun is usually a single word, but not always: cake, shoes, school bus, and time and a half are all nouns.

For learners of English, the most important feature of a noun is whether it can be counted. A count noun is a noun that can be used after a or an or after a number (or another word that means "more than one"). Count nouns have both singular and plural forms and can be used with both singular and plural verb forms.

A letter for you is on the table. Letters for you arrive regularly.

That man is his partner. The two men are partners in the business.

One person came in at noon. A few people are going to be late.

Can I use your cell phone? Our cell phones aren't working here.

Sometimes the plural form of a count noun is the same as its singular form.

I saw a deer in my yard yesterday. There are a lot of deer in the woods near my house.

A noncount (or mass) noun refers to something that cannot be counted. Noncount nouns are normally not used after the words a or an or after a number. They have only one form and are used with singular verb forms.

The rain is still coming down heavily.

The information was unclear.

Her despair now seems even deeper.

A few noncount nouns look like plurals but are used with the singular forms of verbs.

Physics is what he likes best.

The news that morning was good.

Gerunds, which are nouns that are identical to the present participle (-ing form) of a verb, are also noncount nouns.

I enjoy swimming more than running.

Her crying made me sad.

Not all nouns fall into the categories count and noncount. Nouns which only ever refer to one thing are called singular nouns.

Saturn is the sixth planet from the sun.

We heard a terrible din in the alley.

A plural noun refers to more than one person or thing, or sometimes to something that has two main parts. Plural nouns have only one form and are used with plural verb forms.

Townspeople are invited to a forum on the project.

These scissors are dull.

Her gray pants were being cleaned.

A particular noun can have any or all of these kinds of uses.

[count] I've read that book several times.

[singular] The time is 3:22.

[plural] Fuel costs three times as much as it did five years ago.

Other categories that can be used to describe nouns include common nouns and proper nouns. A common noun refers to a person, place, or thing but is not the name of a particular person, place, or thing. Examples are animal, sunlight, and happiness. A proper noun is the name of a particular person, place, or thing, and it begins with a capital letter: Abraham Lincoln, Argentina, and World War I are all proper nouns.

A collective noun is a noun that names a group of people or things. It is sometimes unclear whether the verb for a collective noun should be singular or plural. In the United States, such nouns as company, team, herd, public, and class, as well as the names of companies, teams, etc., are treated as singular, but in the United Kingdom they are often treated as plural.

The jury has [=(Brit) have] been seated.

The crowd was [=(Brit) were] restless.

The committee is [=(Brit) are] meeting now.

The British royal family is [=(Brit) are] partly German.

General Electric is [=(Brit) are] hoping for a contract with Kuwait.

Pronouns

A pronoun is a word that is used instead of a noun or noun phrase. Pronouns refer to either a noun that has already been mentioned or to a noun that does not need to be named specifically.

The most common pronouns are the personal pronouns. These refer to the person or people speaking or writing (first person), the person or people being spoken to (second person), or other people or things (third person). Several of the personal pronouns have singular and plural forms. Like nouns, personal pronouns can function as either the subject of a verb or the object of a verb or preposition. Most of the personal pronouns have different subject and object forms.

	as subject
	singular	plural
1st person	I	we
2nd person	you	you
3rd person	he, she, it	they

	as object
	singular	plural
1st person	me	us
2nd person	you	you
3rd person	him, her, it	them

She likes him, but he loves her.

I sent them a wedding gift, and they thanked me.

We were late, and the train left without us.

I, me, you, he, she, him, her, his, we, and us can refer to people (most of these can also refer to animals) but not to things. It can refer to animals or things. They and them can refer to people, animals, or things.

The interrogative pronouns—particularly what, which, who, whom, and whose—introduce questions for which a noun is the answer.

What are you taking?

Which do you prefer?

Who's at the door?

For whom are you working?

Whose is this?

(The less common interrogative pronouns include whoever, whomever, whichever, and whatever.) Interrogative pronouns are neither singular nor plural. What, which, and whose may also be interrogative adjectives; see p. 1933.

Possessive pronouns refer to things or people that belong to someone. The main possessive pronouns are mine, yours, his, hers, its, ours, and theirs. Possessive pronouns take the place of a possessive adjective (see p. 1933) plus a noun.

It's my book. = It's mine.

That's his computer. = That's his.

This is our house. = This is ours.

See Possession, p. 1948.

The four demonstrative pronouns—this, that, these, and those—distinguish the person or thing being referred to from other people or things. This and these indicate people or things that are here, nearby, or in the present. That and those are used to indicate people or things that are not here, not nearby, or in the past or future. The demonstrative pronouns are identical to the demonstrative adjectives (see p. 1932).

This situation is unfortunate. = This is unfortunate.

Who thought of that idea? = Who thought of that?

These dancers will replace those dancers. = These will replace those.

Relative pronouns introduce subordinate clauses. (A subordinate clause is part of a sentence that includes a subject and verb but does not form a sentence by itself; see p. 1945.) The main relative pronouns are that, which, who, whom, what, and whose; others include whoever, whomever, whatever, and whichever. Relative pronouns are neither singular nor plural.

She liked the students who talked in class.

The design that Stanley drew was quite odd.

The prizes go to whoever finishes first.

Reflexive pronouns refer back to the subject of a sentence or clause and are formed by adding -self or -selves to a personal pronoun or possessive adjective (p. 1933).

myself	ourselves
yourself	yourselves
himself, herself, itself	themselves

You think of yourself as a good person.

She told herself that it would be all right.

We were afraid the children might harm themselves.

Reflexive pronouns are also sometimes used for emphasis.

I'm sending my brother since I can't be there myself.

Indefinite pronouns do not refer to a specific person or thing. The most important indefinite pronouns include:

all	everything	nothing
another	few	one
any	less	the other anybody	little	others
anyone	many	several anything	more	some
both	most	somebody
each	much	someone either	neither	something enough	no one	such everybody	nobody
everyone	none

No one wants to leave yet.

Several of the students hadn't arrived.

He finished his drink and asked for another.

They didn't choose anybody from my class.

One doesn't like to think of such things.

Most of the indefinite pronouns may also be used as indefinite adjectives (see p. 1932).

The words it and there can also be used like pronouns when the rules of grammar require a subject but no noun is actually being referred to. Both are usually used at the beginning of a sentence or clause.

It was almost noon.

It's raining.

It's very odd.

Sunday might be better, but it doesn't really matter.

There is some cake left.

There are many reasons to doubt him.

Agreement between a pronoun and the noun or pronoun that it refers to is essential (that is, a pronoun and the noun or pronoun that it refers to must be alike grammatically). There are three kinds of agreement.

First, a personal, possessive, or reflexive pronoun must agree in person with the noun or pronoun it refers to. The first person pronouns (I, me, mine, myself, we, us, ours, ourselves) can refer only to the person or persons speaking or writing. The second person pronouns (you, yours, yourself, yourselves) refer to the person or persons being spoken or written to. The third person pronouns (he, she, it, they, him, her, them, his, hers, its, theirs, himself, herself, itself, themselves) refer to everyone and everything else.

We already have ours.

You may serve yourself.

Second, most pronouns must agree in number with the noun or pronoun that they refer to. (Interrogative and relative pronouns do not indicate number.) A singular pronoun must refer to one person or thing, and a plural pronoun must refer to more than one person or thing.

That is the only choice we have.

Those are the only choices we have.

Finally, a personal pronoun must agree in gender with the noun or pronoun that it refers to (that is, a personal pronoun must match the person's sex). Animals are often treated as neuter.

He only drives his motorcycle on the weekends.

Antonia joined her father for lunch downtown.

The cat crept into the yard for its evening meal.

Number and gender together sometimes create a pronoun problem in the third person singular. English has no third person singular personal pronoun that can be used for both male and female people. Traditionally, he, his, him, and himself have been used when referring to someone whose sex is not known. However, this is now often regarded as sexist. Therefore, "he or she," "his or her," "him or her," and "himself or herself" are now often used instead, and the plural pronouns they, their, them, and themselves are used even more often.

Anyone can win if they buy a ticket. = Anyone can win if he or she buys a ticket.

Everyone has to bring their own lunch. = Everyone has to bring his or her own lunch.

Some people disapprove of using a plural pronoun in such cases because it does not display agreement in number. The use is very common, however, in speech and informal writing.

/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

Pronouns, like nouns, must also agree with their verbs in person and number.

It is possible.

We're glad about that.

Since -body, -one, and -thing are singular forms, the indefinite pronouns anybody, anyone, anything, everybody, everyone, everything, nobody, no one, nothing, somebody, someone, and something are treated as singular.

Everybody is welcome.

Someone has to tell her.

Everything is fine.

Another, each, either, neither, one, and (the) other are also treated as singular.

I have six bowls for sale, and each costs $10.

There are two nurses on staff, but neither is here right now.

Verbs

This section provides a brief introduction to verbs. They are discussed at greater length at The English Verb System, p. 1936.

Verbs are words that show an action, occurrence, or state of being. Almost every sentence requires a verb. The basic form of a verb is known as its infinitive.

call	beat
love	go

See Infinitives, p. 1940.

Almost all verbs have two other important forms called participles. Participles are forms that are used to create several verb tenses (forms that are used to show when an action happened); they can also be used as adjectives. The present participle always ends in -ing.

calling	beating
loving	going

(There is also a kind of noun, called a gerund, that is identical in form to the present participle form of a verb.)

The past participle usually ends in -ed. However, many past participles have irregular endings.

called	beaten
loved	gone

See Participles, p. 1940.

The verb's past tense (see p. 1937) usually has the same -ed form as the past participle. For many verbs, however, the past tense is irregular. An irregular past tense is not always identical to an irregular past participle.

called	beat
loved	went

The infinitive form, past tense, and past participle are often called the principal parts of the verb. Sometimes the present participle is also included in the principal parts. From these, all the tenses and forms of almost any verb can be created. A regular verb forms its past tense and past participle with -ed. An irregular verb forms either its past tense or its past participle, or both, without -ed.

infinitive	past tense	past participle
call	called	called
love	loved	loved
beat	beat	beaten
go	went	gone

Many common English verbs are irregular. See a list of these at Irregular Verbs, p. 1953.

A transitive verb is a verb that requires a direct object, which is a noun, pronoun, or noun phrase that follows it and completes the sentence's meaning by indicating the person or thing that receives the action of the verb.

That really annoys me.

Have they sold their house yet?

An intransitive verb is not used with a direct object.

Her aunt died suddenly last week.

Someone was coughing loudly.

A single verb can have both transitive and intransitive uses.

They are playing soccer.

They've been playing all afternoon.

Transitive verb entries or senses in this dictionary are labeled [+obj], while intransitive entries or senses are labeled [no obj]. See Transitive and Intransitive Verbs, p. 1941.

In most sentences that contain a transitive verb, the subject is the person or thing that performs the verb's action. However, sometimes the subject is a person or thing that is affected by the action. Sentences of the first type represent active voice; those of the second type represent passive voice.

My grandfather built the barn.

The barn was built by my grandfather.

See Active and Passive Voice, p. 1941.

A linking verb, such as be, seem, look, become, or feel, connects a noun subject with an adjective or with a noun that is not a direct object. The most common linking verb is be.

They're tired and hungry.

His father was a lawyer.

Some linking verbs involve the five senses. Others involve mental impressions. Still others have the basic meaning "become" or "continue to be."

Her voice sounded familiar.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 5 SESS: 49 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:33 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

It feels cold in here.

She seems very nervous.

It appears later than it is.

His ears turned red.

They remained best friends.

The label [linking verb] identifies these verbs in this dictionary.

An auxiliary verb is a verb that is used with another verb to show the verb's tense, to form a question, etc.

The work was completed last year.

Where did they go?

The rain has stopped.

The label [auxiliary verb] identifies these verbs in this dictionary. See Auxiliary Verbs, p. 1938.

Modal verbs (also called modals, modal auxiliaries, and modal auxiliary verbs) are auxiliary verbs like can, must, and might that are used with another verb to express ideas such as possibility, necessity, and permission.

They can leave whenever they want.

She must return the key this morning.

It might be too late.

The label [modal verb] identifies these verbs in this dictionary. See Modal Verbs, p. 1939.

Phrasal verbs are usually two-word verbs made from a one-word verb and an adverb or a preposition. (Occasionally they are three-word verbs that include both an adverb and a preposition.) Phrasal verbs have meanings that are quite different from the meaning of the simple verb by itself.

They're driving to Caracas to pick up two friends.

The boss told us that we could knock off at 4:00.

Tired after the long trip, they turned in after dinner.

The label [phrasal verb] identifies these verbs in this dictionary. See Phrasal Verbs, p. 1943.

English verbs may use three different moods. A mood is a set of verb forms that show whether the action or state expressed by the verb is thought of as a fact, a command, or a wish or possibility. The very common indicative mood is used for ordinary statements.

The strawberries are already ripe.

The imperative mood is used for commands and instructions.

Let me tie your shoe.

Run!

The subjunctive mood is used to express something different from simple fact, such as wishes, possibilities, or requests.

She would prefer that he go alone.

See Mood, p. 1942.

Adjectives

Adjectives describe nouns and pronouns. They may name qualities of all kinds: huge, red, forty, angry, African, unique, talking, lost, female, rare, thoughtful, ancient, technical, best, etc.

An adjective usually comes right before a noun.

a high mountain

fifteen people

the dull, heavy beat

When an adjective follows a linking verb such as be or seem, it is called a predicate adjective.

That building is huge.

The workers seem angry.

Most adjectives can be used as predicate adjectives. In this dictionary, adjectives that cannot be used as predicate adjectives include the note "always used before a noun." Similarly, the few adjectives that can only be used as predicate adjectives are identified with the note "not used before a noun."

Some adjectives describe qualities that can exist in different amounts or degrees. To do this, the adjective will either change in form (usually by adding -er or -est) or will be used with words like more, most, very, slightly, etc.

the older girls

the longest day of the year

a very strong feeling more expensive than that one

Other adjectives describe qualities that do not vary.

nuclear energy

a medical doctor

See Comparison, p. 1949.

The most common of all adjectives are the two (or three) articles. An article always comes before the noun it describes and before any other adjectives that also describe the noun. Articles are used to show whether or not the noun refers to a specific person or thing. The indefinite article is a; it identifies a single, but not specific, person or thing. An is used instead of a whenever the word following it begins with a vowel sound.

Are you going to buy a house?

The smile is a universal sign of pleasure.

It's an honor to have been invited.

I've got an uncle in Miami.

The definite article is the; it is used to refer to identified or specified people or things, both singular and plural.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 6 SESS: 51 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:33 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw-learners-dictionary/101-bm-grammar

Will you be painting the house this summer?

He's the uncle I was telling you about.

Please put the dishes away.

A singular count noun (such as idea or bird) or singular noun (such as patter) is always preceded by a definite or indefinite article or other adjective.

The is used with both count and noncount nouns. It is used when the noun is something that the reader or listener already knows, or something that will be described in the sentence. It is also used when the thing is unique, or when a phrase following the noun distinguishes it from others of its kind.

Give me the keys.

That's not the subject we were discussing.

The prime minister of Turkey had been invited.

That was the news that they wanted to hear.

She's the kindest woman I know.

The is not used when a noun is used to refer to a thing in general or to all things of its kind.

I like salsa music.

Cows eat grass.

Water is heavier than oil.

The meaning of these sentences changes if the is inserted before the nouns. For example, "I like the salsa music" means "I like the particular salsa music that is playing now."

The is rarely used with proper nouns.

The hotel is on Eighth Avenue. [not The hotel is on the Eighth Avenue.]

I caught the fish in Lake Baikal. [not I caught the fish in the Lake Baikal.]

However, it is used with some geographical names that end with a general term (such as River, Bay, or Mountains), and often with proper nouns that occur in the plural.

in the Sahara Desert

the Geneva Conventions

The four demonstrative adjectives—this, that, these, and those—are identical to the demonstrative pronouns (p. 1928). They are used to distinguish the person or thing being described from others of the same category or class. This and these describe people or things that are nearby, or in the present. That and those are used to describe people or things that are not here, not nearby, or in the past or future. These adjectives, like a, an, and the, always come before any other adjectives that modify a noun.

Do you want this one here or that blue one over there?

She answered that question easily, but these new questions will be more difficult.

I was happier in those early days.

We'll deal with those problems when they arise.

An indefinite adjective describes a whole group or class of people or things, or a person or thing that is not identified or familiar. The most common indefinite adjectives are:

all	half	one, two, three, etc.
another	least	other
any	less	several both	little	some each	many	such either	more	whole enough	most every	much
few	neither

Any pen will do.

Some people were unhappy with the decision.

He had other reasons.

Adjectives that express amount or number are sometimes called quantifiers, and many quantifiers are indefinite adjectives. Some of these are used only with count nouns.

both friends few friends

two friends

several friends

many friends

Others are used only with noncount nouns.

little cash

less cash

much cash

And others can be used with both count and noncount nouns.

all friends/cash

any friends/cash

enough friends/cash

most friends/cash

no friends/cash

some friends/cash

Most indefinite adjectives can also be used as indefinite pronouns (see p. 1929).

There isn't any left.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 7 SESS: 52 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:34 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

Some were unhappy with the decision.

Five of them were caught, but three others escaped.

The interrogative adjectives—primarily which, what, and whose—are used to begin questions. They can also be used as interrogative pronouns (see p. 1928).

Which horse did you bet on? = Which did you bet on?

What songs did they sing? = What did they sing?

Whose coat is this? = Whose is this?

See Questions, p. 1946.

The possessive adjectives—my, your, his, her, its, our, their—tell you who has, owns, or has experienced something.

He admired her intelligence.

Our cat is 14 years old.

They said their trip was wonderful.

See also the discussion of possessive pronouns, p. 1928.

Proper adjectives are based on proper nouns and start with a capital letter.

The best gift was a box of French chocolates.

Their children attended a Christian school.

my weird sister

my weird brother

Nouns often function like adjectives. When they do, they are called attributive nouns. Most nouns can be used in this way. When they are, they always precede the nouns they are modifying. A noun used like an adjective does not change its form, except that it usually omits any plural ending.

his research paper

the apartment building

a lemon drink

Two or more attributive nouns may be used together. Unlike other adjectives, they are never separated by commas. When attributive nouns and true adjectives are used together, the true adjectives precede the attributive nouns.

new work safety rules

the experienced summer baseball league staff

When two or more adjectives are used before a noun, they should be put in proper order. Any article (a, an, the), demonstrative adjective (that, these, etc.), indefinite adjective (another, both, etc.), or possessive adjective (her, our, etc.) always comes first. If there is a number, it comes first or second. As noted above, true adjectives always come before attributive nouns. The ordering of true adjectives will vary, but the following order is the most common: opinion word → size → age → shape → color → nationality → material. (In the examples below, only the true adjectives and not the attributive nouns are shown in italics.)

the old Russian coins

those first few words valuable company phone records his three clean shirts brutal young gang members

several large, bluish-green, wooden chairs

Participles are often used like ordinary adjectives. They may come before a noun or after a linking verb. A present participle (an -ing word) describes the person or thing that causes something; for example, a boring conversation is one that bores you. A past participle (usually an -ed word) describes the person or thing who has been affected by something; for example, a bored person is one who has been affected by boredom.

They had just watched an exciting soccer game.

The instructions were confusing.

The freezing wind kept everyone indoors all day.

She's excited about the trip to North Africa.

Several confused students were asking questions about the test.

The lake was frozen.

See Participles, p. 1940.

Adverbs

Adverbs usually modify verbs. They may also modify adjectives, other adverbs, phrases, or even entire sentences.

An adverb answers the question "When?" "Where?" "How?" "How much?" "How long?" or "How often?"

The elections are coming soon.

They only shopped locally.

She was happily married to a truck driver.

The roads are very steep.

He stopped by briefly to say hello.

My son calls me regularly.

/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

Most adverbs are formed by adding -ly to an adjective. If the adjective already ends in -y, the -y usually changes to -i.

bold / boldly solid / solidly interesting / interestingly heavy / heavily unnecessary / unnecessarily

Common adverbs that do not end in -ly include:

again	more	today
also	never	too
always	not	very
as	now	well
even	often	when ever	sometimes	where here	soon	why
how	then
just	there

The words when, where, why, and how are called interrogative adverbs when they begin a question.

When did the shooting occur?

Where is the proof?

Why was he so late?

How did they get here?

See Questions, p. 1946.

The relative adverbs—where, when, and why (how is sometimes included as well)—introduce subordinate (or dependent) clauses (clauses that do not form simple sentences by themselves; see p. 1945).

This is the house where I grew up.

They go to bed when they want to.

He wondered why the door was open.

See Complex Sentences, p. 1945.

When an adverb modifies a whole sentence or clause, it is called a sentence adverb. Words such as fortunately, frankly, hopefully, and luckily are generally used as sentence adverbs and usually express the speaker's feelings about the content of the sentence. Such adverbs normally come at the beginning of a sentence, but may also come in the middle or at the end.

Unfortunately, Friday will be cloudy.

Friday, unfortunately, will be cloudy.

Friday will be cloudy, unfortunately.

An adverb may not come between a verb and its direct or indirect object.

They soon informed the admiral. [not They informed soon the admiral.]

The trees were slowly losing their leaves. [not The trees were losing slowly their leaves.]

Later they bought him a new bike. [not *They bought later him a new bike.*or They bought him later a new bike.]

Many adverbs, like many adjectives, describe qualities that can exist in different amounts or degrees.

This time she was working more carefully.

The bus arrived sooner than they expected.

The most frequently used word is probably the.

See Comparison, p. 1949.

Many adverbs, such as past, under, off, along, and on, may also act as prepositions (see the section immediately below). A few, such as however, also, thus, and nevertheless, may act as conjunctions (words that join together other words or groups of words; see p. 1935).

Prepositions

Prepositions, a very important class of words in English, show direction, location, or time, or introduce an object. They are usually followed by an object—a noun, noun phrase, or pronoun. The most common prepositions are:

at	from	on
by	in	to
for	of	with

Also common are:

about	between	outside above	close to	over
across	down	past
after	during	since against	except	through along	inside	toward among	instead of	under around	into	until
because of	like	up before	near	upon behind	off	within below	on top of	without beneath	onto beside	out of Prepositions typically show how the noun, noun phrase, or pronoun is related to another word in the sentence.

a friend of mine
the dress with the stripes hit by a car
no one except me

The preposition and its object normally form a prepositional phrase; see p. 1944.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 9 SESS: 55 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:34 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

A preposition may appear at the end of a sentence or clause, but only when its object comes earlier.

Was he the man she lived with?

That isn't what a hammer is for.

It's the chair you're sitting on.

She just needs someone to talk to.

Many prepositions (such as past, under, off, along, and on) may also act as adverbs. A few (including before, after, for, and since) may act as conjunctions (words that join together other words or groups of words).

	preposition	adverb	conjunction
after	I saw them after the game.	We were due at noon, but didn't arrive until after.	Call me after it's over.
for	I baked it for you.		It was true, for I saw it myself.
since	I've waited since noon.	He's never been the same since.	It's been years since I've sung.

Conjunctions

Conjunctions are words that join together other words or groups of words.

A coordinating conjunction connects words, phrases, and clauses of equal importance. The main coordinating conjunctions are and, or, and but.

They bought apples, pears, and oranges.

You can wait either on the steps or in the car.

Her paintings are pleasant but bland.

The dogs barked, but he just ignored them.

When placed at the beginning of a sentence, a coordinating conjunction may also link two sentences or paragraphs.

War loomed on the horizon. But the country wasn't ready for another war.

She told him that he would have to work to earn her trust. And he proceeded to do just that.

A subordinating conjunction introduces a subordinate clause (a clause that does not form a simple sentence by itself; see p. 1945) and joins it to a main clause (a clause that can be used as a simple sentence by itself; see p. 1945).

She waited until the students were quiet.

They had been lonely since their father left.

See Complex Sentences, p. 1945.

Some conjunctions are used in pairs. The most common pairs are either . . . or, both . . . and, neither . . . nor, and not only . . . but (also). If verbs follow each conjunction, both verbs must be in the same form.

They could either continue searching or go to the police.

Both Clara and Jeanette graduated from Stanford.

He could neither sing nor dance.

Not only the money but also the jewelry had been taken.

Some adverbs act like conjunctions by linking either two main clauses separated by a semicolon (;) or two separate sentences. They express some effect that the first clause or sentence has on the second one. The most common adverbs that do this are:

accordingly
afterwards also anyway besides consequently finally for example for instance however incidentally indeed in fact likewise meanwhile moreover namely nevertheless nonetheless otherwise regardless similarly so still that is therefore thus

They didn't agree; however, each understood the other's opinion.

We'll probably regret it; still, we really have no choice.

The team has won its last three games. Thus, its record for the year is now 15–12.

Interjections

An interjection is a word or phrase that is grammatically independent and mainly expresses feeling rather than meaning.

Oh, what a beautiful house!

Uh-oh, this looks bad.

Well, it's time to say good night.

Actually, um, she's not my girlfriend.

Shoot. I thought I'd fixed that.

Interjections are common in speech and are much more common in electronic messages than in other types of writing.

THE ENGLISH VERB SYSTEM

The following sections discuss in detail all the kinds, forms, and functions of English verbs.

Verb Tenses

Tenses are the different forms used by almost all English verbs to show when an action happened. English verb forms are simple, but the ways that verbs may be combined can be complex.

Present Tenses

The present tense is used to refer to the period of time that exists now. It always uses the basic form of the verb, called the infinitive, except in the third-person singular.

I understand	we understand
you understand	you understand
he/she/it understands	they understand

The third-person singular normally adds -s to the infinitive. Verbs ending in -ch, -s, -sh, -x, and -z add -es. In verbs ending in -y preceded by a consonant, the -y changes to -ies. (If a vowel precedes the -y, the -y does not change.) Do changes to does, go changes to goes, and have changes to has.

The monument sits atop a hill.

She loves him and he loves her.

The iguana sometimes catches small birds.

The road crosses a river.

Her book mixes biography and fantasy.

He relies on his parents for money.

The dog's barking annoys our neighbors.

What does she want?

Be is the most irregular of all verbs in the present tense (I am, you/we/they are, he/she/it is).

The present tense is used to talk about something that is true now and most of the time. It is also used for something that happens regularly.

He lives in Nigeria.

Baghdad lies on the Tigris River.

Do they really believe that?

Haste makes waste.

She reads several books a month.

Buses come often on weekdays.

The present progressive (or present continuous) tense uses am/are/is with the present participle (-ing form) of the main verb.

I am coming	we are coming you are coming	you are coming
he/she/it is coming	they are coming

The present progressive tense indicates that something is happening right now or is continuing to happen.

How many miles are you running these days?

The engine is leaking oil.

The prime minister is traveling all this week.

Let's talk later—I*'m eating* lunch.

She's still sleeping.

It is also used to talk informally about events in the near future.

We*'re eating* out tonight.

Are you coming next week?

Some verbs or senses of verbs always use the present tense in situations where you might expect the present progressive tense. These include most verbs related to the five senses

Do you hear it? [not Are you hearing it?]

This tastes funny. [not This is tasting funny.]

It feels heavy. [not It is feeling heavy.] and most verbs connected with mental states and functions.

We only want peace. [not We're only wanting peace.]

They believe him. [not They're believing him.]

She knows the answer. [not She's knowing the answer.]

I don't remember. [not I'm not remembering.]

That seems strange to me. [not That is seeming strange to me.]

These verbs also include verbs of possession such as own, belong, and have.

The company owns at least forty stores. [not The company is owning at least forty stores.]

His aunt has a house in the country. [not His aunt is having a house in the country.]

The label "not used in progressive tenses" is used in the book to identify these verbs and verb senses.

Special tenses called the perfect tenses are used to show a relationship between two different times. The present perfect tense uses have/has with the past participle (a form usually identical to the past tense that generally expresses completed action).

I have finished	we have finished
you have finished	you have finished
he/she/it has finished	they have finished

The present perfect is used to talk about (1) activities or states that began in the past and are completed at the time of speaking, (2) past activities that have a result in the present, (3) events that have just happened, and (4) events that happened at an unspecified time in the past.

I have fixed the radio.

This evidence has influenced our decision.

We*'ve eaten* dinner.

She has decided not to go to college.

Several adverbs that indicate time—just, since, already, yet, and ever—are often used with the present perfect to connect the past with the present.

I*'ve just returned* from Memphis.

I saw her Tuesday but I *have*n't seen her since.

We*'ve already seen* that movie.

Have you gotten your grades yet?

Did he ever love her?

The present perfect progressive (or present perfect continuous) tense combines have/has been and a present participle (-ing form).

I have been studying	we have been studying you have been studying	you have been studying
he/she/it has been studying	they have been studying

The present perfect progressive tense is used to talk about events that began in the past and continue in the present moment.

The war has been raging since 1997.

How long have you been waiting?

We*'ve been painting* the house this weekend.

Have they been playing video games all morning?

Past Tenses

The past tense is used to talk about events that began and ended in the past. The form of a verb in the past tense is the same in the first person, second person, and third person, and in the singular and plural (except in the verb be). For regular verbs, the past tense is normally formed by adding -ed (or just -d if the verb ends in -e) to the infinitive. If the verb ends with a short vowel and a single consonant and is accented on the last syllable, its final consonant is doubled. If it ends in -y, the -y usually changes to -i. (If a vowel precedes the -y, the -y doesn't change.)

talk	The two women talked for hours.
wave	He waved to the kids from the window.
stop	They stopped at the store.
try	Diplomats tried to bring the two sides together.

Irregular verbs have an irregular past-tense form.

build	They built a new house on the hill.
come	She came at six this morning.
go	The taxi went the wrong way.
speak	He spoke to the governor about it.

See list of Irregular Verbs, p. 1953.

The imperfect tense (also known as the past progressive or past continuous tense) is formed from was/were and a present participle (-ing form).

I was sleeping	we were sleeping
you were sleeping	you were sleeping
he/she/it was sleeping	they were sleeping

The imperfect tense is used to talk about incomplete actions in the past or about states that continued for a period of time in the past. It is often used in the same sentence with a verb in the past tense.

We were driving home and forgot to stop.

I bought it when I was living in London.

The past perfect tense is formed from had and a past participle.

I had imagined	we had imagined
you had imagined	you had imagined
he/she/it had imagined	they had imagined

The past perfect is used to refer to an action that was completed by a particular time in the past. Like the imperfect tense, it often is used in sentences with another verb in the past tense.

I had met him only once before he moved away.

We hadn't known that she had a daughter.

When it is clear what other event is referred to, the clause with the other verb may be omitted.

I had met him only once.

We hadn't known.

The informal verb used to, followed by an infinitive, functions much like the simple past tense. Used to refers to something that happened or existed in the past but no longer happens or exists. It refers especially to something that happened repeatedly or to a situation that lasted for a period of time.

This room used to be filled with junk.

When they were first in love, they used to meet at night down by the river.

The form "use to" is rarely seen in writing but is heard in informal speech, always with did or didn't.

Did you use to go out with Kate?

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 12 SESS: 75 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:35 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

I didn't use to like broccoli, but now I do.

The past perfect progressive (or past perfect continuous) tense is formed from had been and a present participle (-ing form).

I had been reading	we had been reading
you had been reading	you had been reading
he/she/it had been reading	they had been reading

The past perfect progressive is somewhat rare. It is generally used in sentences that have another verb.

We had been living there a year when the baby was born.

Future Tenses

The future tense is formed with will and an infinitive.

I will arrive	we will arrive
you will arrive	you will arrive
he/she/it will arrive	they will arrive

The future tense predicts a future event or condition.

Christmas will be on a Friday this year.

My mother will retire in June.

In the first person, the formal shall is sometimes used in place of will.

I shall [=will] inform them immediately.

We shall [=will] expect a full report from you.

An informal form of the future tense uses am/are/is going to instead of will. The going to future tense is very common in speech.

I am going to arrive	we are going to arrive
you are going to arrive	you are going to arrive
he/she/it is going to arrive	they are going to arrive

I hope my parents are going to [=will] like it.

It*'s going to* [=will] be hot tomorrow.

The future progressive (or future continuous) tense is formed with will be and a present participle (-ing form).

I will be dancing	we will be dancing
you will be dancing	you will be dancing
he/she/it will be dancing	they will be dancing

The future progressive is used to talk about an activity that will be happening in the future, or an activity happening now that will end in the future.

On Friday the committee will be meeting again.

We*'ll be staying* here for two weeks.

The future perfect tense is formed from will have and a past participle.

I will have gone	we will have gone
you will have gone	you will have gone
he/she/it will have gone	they will have gone

The future perfect, a rarely used tense, is used to refer to an action that will be completed by a specified time in the future.

By this time tomorrow they will have arrived.

She*'ll have left* before the ceremony begins.

The future perfect progressive (or future perfect continuous) tense is formed from will have been and a present participle (-ing form).

I will have been skiing	we will have been skiing
you will have been skiing	you will have been skiing
he/she/it will have been skiing	they will have been skiing

The future perfect progressive is very rare. It is used to talk about a time in the future when an activity that began earlier will still be continuing.

In May we will have been living here for ten years.

Kinds of Verbs

Action Verbs

Action verbs, as the name suggests, simply express action. Most verbs fall into this category and include such words as care, drive, think, and distinguish.

The children ran across the field.

Can you build a fire?

I think that's the right answer.

Linking Verbs

Linking verbs connect a subject with an adjective or noun that describes or identifies the subject. They include act, aggregate, appear, be, become, come, constitute, equal, feel, form, get, go, grow, keep, look, make, measure, prove, remain, represent, seem, smell, sound, stay, taste, and turn.

Today is Friday.

It became clear that we needed to find another solution.

The tea tastes sweet.

All of these can also be used as action verbs. Their linking verb senses are labeled [linking verb] in this dictionary.

Auxiliary Verbs

An auxiliary verb (or helping verb) is used with another verb (or two other verbs) in a verb phrase.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 13 SESS: 78 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:35 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

Be, Have,* and *Do

The verbs be, have, and do are used both as independent verbs and as auxiliary verbs.

Have is used to form all the perfect tenses ("has worked," "had worked," "have been working," etc.), including the modal perfect tenses ("must have worked," etc.). See pp. 1936–37 and 1939 (below).

Be is used to form all the progressive tenses ("is talking," "was talking," "have been talking," etc.) as well as the passive voice ("is pulled," "was pulled," "is being pulled," etc.) and is also used to join to infinitives to the subject of a sentence or clause ("she is to retire soon"). See Active and Passive Voice, p. 1941; Infinitives, p. 1940.

Do occurs as an auxiliary verb mainly in negative sentences and in questions. See Negation, p. 1948, and Questions, p. 1946.

Do is also occasionally used for emphasis. In this use, do is followed by an infinitive without to, just like the modal verbs (see below).

I really do want to go.

He does talk a lot.

A few jobs did need to be finished first.

Do may also substitute for another verb that has just been stated.

This one doesn't look large enough, and neither does that one.

Did they succeed? No, they didn't.

Her mother worked all day, and so did his sister. [=and his sister also worked all day]

Notice that this is possible even when the other verb does not have an auxiliary do.

Modal Verbs

A small group of auxiliary verbs, called the modal verbs (or modal auxiliary verbs, modal auxiliaries, or simply modals), are only used in combination with ordinary verbs. A modal verb changes the other verb's meaning to something different from simple fact. Modals may express permission, ability, prediction, possibility, or necessity. The principal modal verbs are:

can	ought could	shall may	should might	will must	would

A few other verbs are closely related to the true modal verbs, especially had better	need

The modal verbs are different from ordinary verbs in several ways: (1) Modal verbs have no inflections at all; that is, they lack an -ing form, an -ed form, and even an -s form for the third-person singular. (2) A modal verb is always followed by the infinitive form of a verb (unless that verb has already been stated) but never follows another verb. (3) Modal verbs do not follow to and are not followed by to. (Ought to, like the near-modal verb have to, is a special case.)

In their simple form, modal verbs normally refer to present or future time.

It must be almost 10:00.

He might call tomorrow.

That road can be dangerous.

The modal progressive also expresses present or future time, especially in conversation. It is formed with be and a present participle (-ing form).

See if they're upstairs—they could be watching TV.

We could be going to El Salvador next year.

Past tense involving modals is usually expressed by the modal perfect, in which the modal verb is followed by have and a past participle.

It must have happened last year. [=It's very likely that it happened last year.]

He might have called yesterday. [=It's possible that he called yesterday.]

But will have or shall have with a past participle forms the ordinary future perfect.

By tomorrow he will have called.

We shall [or will] have left before September.

Most modal verbs lack a true past tense. However, could often functions as the past tense of can; could and might often function as the past tense of may; and would often functions as the past tense of both will and shall. Could, might, ought, would, and should keep the same form in the past tense.

I know I can take the train if necessary.

I knew I could take the train if necessary.

The next few months could be difficult.

Everyone knew the next few months could be difficult.

He believes that the stock market may suffer.

He believed that the stock market might suffer.

They think the war will be over soon.

They thought the war would be over soon.

I think I shall stay home.

I thought I would stay home.

It could take a while.

She said it could take a while.

The weatherman says it might snow.

The weatherman said it might snow.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 14 SESS: 79 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:35 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

We realize we ought to leave.

We realized we ought to leave.

It would be better to remain silent.

She said it would be better to remain silent.

He thinks we should leave.

He thought we should leave.

Must is rarely used in the past tense; have to is generally used instead.

We all realize that the factory must [=has to] close.

In 1988 the factory had to close.

Had better remains the same in the present and past.

They had better get there soon.

They knew they had better get there soon.

In the present tense, certain modal verbs often have the same meaning as certain others.

We might [=may, could] go to the movies tonight.

She could [=might, may] have stopped there on the way back.

You can [=may] read for an hour before bedtime.

He should [=ought to] drive more carefully.

A modal verb has little meaning without another verb. But the other verb is often omitted when it has just been stated, especially in conversation.

"Do you think you'll stay in Paris?" "I might."

"He may go to graduate school." "I think he should."

For more examples, see the individual entries for these verbs. For the use of will and shall in the future tenses, see p. 1938. See also Questions, p. 1946; Negation, p. 1948; Active and Passive Voice, p. 1941; Conditional Sentences, p. 1950; and Contractions, p. 1957.

Other Verb Forms

Two kinds of verb forms—infinitives and participles—have no tense by themselves. They may be used either (1) in combination with some other verb or (2) as some other part of speech, such as a noun or an adjective.

Infinitives

The infinitive is the basic form of the verb. It is used by itself in the present tense.

I've done everything but issue a formal apology.

Usually, however, it is preceded by to and follows another verb that expresses tense, person, and number.

I needed to sleep a few more hours.

It was hard to see in the dense fog.

College students like to party on weekends.

The infinitive without to sometimes follows the verbs make, do, see, feel, hear, and watch.

We watched him light the candles one by one.

Please make them stop.

Did you ever see her dance?

A few verbs are always followed by an infinitive without to. They are let, have (when have means "to cause, tell, or ask someone to do something"), and the modal verbs.

Don't let him take my car.

Have her bring us the check.

You must be here when I get back.

The to infinitive can be used as a noun, adjective, or adverb or (more often) in a noun phrase, adjective phrase, or adverb phrase.

noun phrase:	To learn English is my main goal.
	Our aim is to make you feel at home.
adjective phrase:	Her attempt to solve the problem failed.
adverb phrase:	He only wanted to help his friends.

In a noun phrase, the to infinitive can usually be replaced by a gerund (a noun in the form of a present participle).

Learning English is my main goal.

Our aim is making you feel at home.

Sometimes an adverb or an adverb phrase comes between to and the verb, creating a split infinitive. Some native speakers dislike split infinitives, but they are very common.

Today he expected to finally meet the great author.

Participles

The two participles are required to create verb tenses and are also used as adjectives.

For regular verbs, the past participle has the same -ed form as the past tense. But for most irregular verbs, it has an irregular form that must be memorized. (See list of Irregular Verbs, p. 1953.) Past participles usually express completed action and are used to form three perfect tenses.

present perfect	have/has learned past perfect	had learned future perfect	will have learned

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 15 SESS: 76 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:35 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

(The past participle been is also used for the perfect continuous tenses.)

Many past participles are common adjectives.

Some of his friends are known criminals.

He noticed her worried expression.

My parents are excited.

By now they were drunk.

The exhausted travelers soon went to bed.

This was their first view of the king's chosen bride.

The present participle always ends in -ing, and is used to refer to action that is happening at the time of speaking or a time spoken of. It is used to form all the progressive verb tenses.

present progressive:	am/are/is eating present perfect progressive:	have/has been eating imperfect:	was/were eating past perfect progressive:	had been eating future progressive:	will be eating future perfect progressive:	will have been eating

They were eating lunch when the police arrived.

We had been hoping you would come.

She*'ll be running* in the Boston Marathon.

Like many past participles, many present participles also commonly serve as adjectives.

a very demanding boss

the devastating storm

another boring movie

Some verbs can be followed by either a to infinitive or a present participle. For a few of these verbs, including begin, continue, hate, like, love, prefer, and start, the meaning of the sentence does not change.

They began counting the ballots. = They began to count the ballots.

But for the verbs forget, remember, and stop, the meaning may change completely.

They stopped to watch the horses. [= They stopped because they wanted to watch the horses.]

They stopped watching the horses. [= They were watching the horses but then stopped.]

See also Participial Phrases, p. 1944.

Transitive and Intransitive Verbs

A direct object is the person or thing that receives the action of a verb. An indirect object is the person or thing that the action is done for or directed to. Objects are always nouns, noun phrases, or pronouns.

Any pronoun object must be in its object form (me, him, her, us, them, etc.).

I love her, and she loves me.

Give it to him.

A verb that is used with a direct object is called a transitive verb. A transitive verb may also be used with an indirect object. A verb that is never used with a direct object is an intransitive verb. One sense of a verb may be transitive while another sense is intransitive.

The trail up the mountain climbs steeply.

Both the children like to climb trees.

Also, a single sense of a verb can have both transitive and intransitive uses.

He likes to read biographies.

He likes to read.

In this dictionary, transitive verbs (and uses and senses) have the label [+ obj] and intransitive verbs (and uses and senses) have the label [no obj].

An indirect object always comes before a direct object. Many common verbs—including give, take, show, tell, sell, get, buy, explain, make, find, teach, write, do, call, ask, send, and bring—can be used with both direct and indirect objects.

Find her a chair. [=Find a chair for her.]

Can you read me the letter? [=Can you read the letter to me?]

Who gave her lawyers the information? [=Who gave the information to her lawyers?]

He's saving Caitlin a piece. [=He's saving a piece for Caitlin.]

As the examples in brackets show, an indirect object can always be replaced by a to or for phrase that follows the direct object. But note that you cannot say Find for her a chair.

Find a chair her.

Active and Passive Voice

In a sentence with an action verb (rather than a linking verb) and a direct object, two features tell us who or what is doing the action, and who or what is receiving the action. One feature is word order. The normal word order in English is subject →verb →object.

The police arrested his wife.

The second feature is the form of the verb. The ordinary form of the verb expresses the active

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 16 SESS: 76 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:36 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar voice; this means that the subject is the one doing the action expressed by the verb. If a verb is instead in the passive voice, the subject becomes the person or thing that is acted on or affected by the action.

His wife was arrested by the police.

Here, the original object ("his wife") has become the subject, and the original subject ("the police") is preceded by "by."

The passive voice is normally formed by using one or more auxiliary verbs and the past participle of the main verb. See the following examples of active and passive voice in several tenses.

present:	Carelessness causes many accidents. Many accidents are caused by carelessness.
present progressive:	A psychiatrist is treating her. She is being treated by a psychiatrist.
past:	Elvis drove that car. That car was driven by Elvis.
imperfect:	Gang members were watching the house. The house was being watched by gang members.
present perfect:	A 15-year-old has solved the puzzle. The puzzle has been solved by a 15-year-old.
past perfect:	Thugs had robbed him. He had been robbed by thugs.
future (will):	Jennifer will return your car. Your car will be returned by Jennifer.
future (going to):	That team isn't going to defeat Brazil. Brazil isn't going to be defeated by that team.

In informal English, get is often used instead of be to produce the passive. In questions and in most negative statements, do must be used as well.

Her talents often get [=are] overlooked.

The dog got [=was] fed earlier.

Did you get [=were you] asked to speak?

The bills didn't get [=weren't] paid.

In a passive sentence, the one doing the action of the verb does not have to be identified.

The puzzle has been solved.

Brazil isn't going to be defeated.

Thus, you may use the passive voice because (1) it is not important to identify the one doing the action, (2) you do not wish to identify the one doing the action, or (3) you do not know the identity of that person or thing.

When the one doing the action of the verb is identified, the passive voice simply changes the emphasis of the sentence.

Federer was beaten by a little-known French player.

Mood

English verbs have three possible forms called moods, which usually indicate whether a sentence (1) states a fact or opinion, (2) gives an order, instruction, or suggestion, or (3) expresses a wish or request or an idea that is not a fact. These are known as the indicative, the imperative, and the subjunctive. (A fourth mood, the interrogative, is sometimes identified. See Questions, p. 1946.)

Indicative

The indicative mood is the mood of ordinary sentences that state facts or opinions and of questions that ask about facts or opinions.

Nobody knows what happened.

The two countries were finally at peace.

They will meet in Berlin next week.

I think it will work.

What happened?

Will it work?

Imperative

The imperative mood is used for orders and instructions, usually without including the subject you. An imperative verb is always identical with the verb's infinitive form.

Please stay here till I get back.

Cut along the dotted line.

Stop!

Let me see.

Don't open it yet.

Subjunctive

The only mood that is difficult for learners is the subjunctive. The subjunctive mood is used to express wishes, proposals, suggestions, or imagined situations. The subjunctive verb usually appears in one clause in a sentence while an indicative verb appears in another clause.

Verbs that often (but not always) are followed by a verb in the subjunctive include:

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 17 SESS: 77 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:36 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw-learners-dictionary/101-bm-grammar

advise	order	require ask	prefer	suggest demand	propose	urge desire	recommend	wish insist	regret
intend	request

He insisted that she stop smoking.

The governor is demanding that he resign.

They asked that you be on time tomorrow.

We recommend that he be punished.

She wishes the teacher were more helpful.

The subjunctive forms look like ordinary past and present verb forms; thus, they are often called the past subjunctive and present subjunctive. These differ from the simple past and simple present in only two ways: (1) In the present subjunctive, there is no -s at the end of the third-person singular (see the first two sentences above). (2) The verb be has only two subjunctive forms: be for the present subjunctive (as in the third and fourth sentences) and were for the past subjunctive (as in the last sentence).

The present subjunctive actually refers mostly to the future. It is generally used in a clause beginning with that (though that may often be omitted).

She suggested (that) he arrive early.

He desires that the carpenter leave space for another bookcase.

See Complex Sentences, p. 1945.

The past subjunctive may refer to the present or the past. Like the present subjunctive, it often occurs in a that clause.

I wish (that) you loved me.

She wishes (that) she were younger.

They talked about him as if he weren't even in the room.

The English subjunctive has always been used inconsistently. Native English-speakers often use should instead of the present subjunctive and use was instead of the past subjunctive's were.

She suggested (that) he should arrive early.

He desires that the carpenter should leave space for another bookcase.

She wishes she was younger.

They talked about him as if he wasn't even in the room.

An important use of the past subjunctive is in clauses beginning with if. See Conditional Sentences, p. 1950.

Phrasal Verbs

A phrasal verb looks like an ordinary verb followed by an adverb or a preposition—or sometimes followed by an adverb and a preposition. However, its meaning is different from the meaning of the ordinary verb by itself.

turn	The car turned left onto a dirt road.
turn up	His brother turned up [=arrived] just in time to join them.
turn out	A large crowd turned out [=gathered] to see the President.
turn down	She turned down [=rejected] several job offers.

The following verbs are the ones that most often form part of phrasal verbs.

break	go	set
bring	hold	sit carry	look	take come	make	turn
find	move	work
get	pick give	put

The following adverbs and prepositions are those that most often form part of phrasal verbs.

about	down	out
after	for	over along	in	through around/ round	into	to away	off	up back	on	with onto

Thus, if you are confused by a sentence, it may help to look for these words. In this book, phrasal verbs are defined in alphabetical order after the main definition(s) of an entry and are labeled [phrasal verb].

Phrasal-verb tenses are formed like ordinary verb tenses.

They hang out a lot.

He hung out all day.

We*'ve been hanging out* for hours.

Some phrasal verbs are transitive and some are intransitive.

When did they knock down that house?

What time do you normally get up?

Most transitive phrasal verbs can be separated. That is, the direct object may go in the middle of the phrasal verb.

When did they knock that house down?

If the object is short (one or two words), it usually goes inside the phrasal verb. If it is long, it usually follows the phrasal verb.

She let the cat out.

She let out the children in grades 4 and 5.

If the object is a personal pronoun, it always goes inside.

/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

When did they knock it down? [not When did they knock down it?]

She let them out. [not She let out them.]

Some transitive phrasal verbs cannot be separated.

We knew we could count on Britain. [not We knew we could count Britain on.]

The examples at the individual dictionary entries will show whether a particular phrasal verb can be separated.

Intransitive phrasal verbs and three-word phrasal verbs cannot be separated.

The truck had broken down in Montreal. [not The truck had broken in Montreal down.]

His sister took up with a new boyfriend. [not His sister took up a new boyfriend with.]

And phrasal verbs in the passive voice are never separated.

The problem had been worked out on Friday. [not The problem had been worked on Friday out.]

The baseball game was held up by rain. [not The baseball game was held by rain up.]

PHRASES, CLAUSES, AND SENTENCES

The basic unit of English expression is the sentence. All sentences contain at least one clause, and phrases are elements of many clauses and sentences.

Phrases

Any group of words that expresses a single idea, functions as a single part of speech, and does not include both a subject and a predicate is a phrase.

A noun phrase, like a noun, refers to a person, animal, thing, place, quality, action, or idea. Noun phrases answer the question "What?" or "Who?" A verb phrase expresses an action, an occurrence, or a state of being. An adverb phrase usually modifies a verb and answers the question "When?" "Where?" "How?" "How much?" "How long?" or "How often?" An adjective phrase modifies nouns and pronouns and answers the question "What kind?" "How many?" or "Which?"

noun phrase	He was crowned king of France.
	A ton of work was waiting for her.
verb phrase	Dinner was being served.
	They had taken off their shoes.
adverb phrase	It must be done with care.
	Last year she married again.
adjective phrase	The article was rather dull.
	They played works by Beethoven.

While a noun phrase will always have a noun in it, and a verb phrase will always have a verb in it, adverb and adjective phrases sometimes do not have adverbs or adjectives in them. The adverb phrase "with care" in the sentence above is made up of the preposition with and the noun care. However, since "with care" answers the question "How?" the phrase is an adverb phrase.

Many adverb and adjective phrases begin with either a preposition or a participle. Such phrases are known as prepositional phrases and participial phrases. Notice that these terms describe the phrase's first word rather than its function.

Prepositional Phrases

A prepositional phrase is a preposition followed by an object. The object is always a noun or a noun-equivalent: a noun phrase, a pronoun, a gerund, or even a noun clause. A prepositional phrase normally follows the word it modifies.

the causes of the war

a gift to his mother's favorite charity

nobody except him

a good day for flying too late for the concert we wanted to hear

A prepositional phrase that acts like an adverb answers the question "When?" "Where?" "How?" "How much?" "How long?" or "How often?"

I sleep late on Saturdays.

There's a woman at the front door.

They did it for the money.

You can eat it with your hands.

A prepositional phrase that acts like an adjective describes a noun.

We bought two pounds of cherries.

Birds with colorful feathers are common here.

The ice in Antarctica is more than a mile deep.

Participial Phrases

A participial phrase is a phrase that begins with a participle (a verb form that usually ends in -ed or -ing) and functions like an adjective.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 19 SESS: 66 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:36 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

They were sitting in a wagon pulled by horses.

He watched two hawks flying in opposite directions.

A woman believed to be a spy has just left the building.

Participial phrases, like prepositional phrases, usually, but not always, follow the words they modify.

The guy sitting by the window is her boyfriend.

The officer injured in the accident was hospitalized.

Lacking a car, she takes the bus to work.

Notice that most participial phrases could instead be included in a subordinate clause beginning with who, which, or that.

The officer who was injured in the accident was hospitalized.

A participial phrase may often be moved within a sentence.

The captain, seeking to beat the speed record, had raced through the strait.

Seeking to beat the speed record, the captain had raced through the strait.

Clauses and Sentences

A clause is a group of words that contains a subject and verb. A main (or independent) clause is part of a larger sentence but could be used by itself as a complete sentence. A subordinate (or dependent) clause cannot form a complete sentence by itself.

A sentence expresses a statement, question, command, or wish. It begins with a capital letter and ends with a period, question mark, or exclamation point. Every sentence has two basic parts: a subject, which is a noun, a noun phrase, or a pronoun that performs the action of the verb; and a predicate, which contains a verb and usually other words as well and expresses what is said about the subject. (In imperative sentences, the subject you is usually absent but understood; see p. 1942.) The subject normally comes before the predicate, but in questions the verb is normally separate from the rest of the predicate and comes before the subject. A prepositional phrase may sometimes appear before the verb in the normal place of the subject.

She took some coins out of her purse.

Was she the only student there?

Shut up or I'll smack you!

I wish it would stop raining.

She likes hip-hop, he likes reggae, and I like blues.

He knew that the police were looking for him.

In the doorway stood a tall, elegantly dressed man.

A sentence must contain a main clause. Sentences that contain a single clause are called simple sentences (see the first, second, and seventh sentences above). Sentences that contain two or more main clauses are called compound sentences (see the third and fifth sentences). Sentences that contain a subordinate clause are called complex sentences (see the fourth and sixth sentence).

Compound Sentences

In a compound sentence, the main clauses are normally joined with a coordinating conjunction (and, or, but) or a semicolon. (For this reason these clauses are sometimes referred to as coordinate clauses.) A comma usually (but not always) precedes the conjunction.

The Senate may vote today, or it may wait till next week.

The rain stopped and the children went back outside.

She liked Toyotas, but he preferred Hondas.

This one is named Lulu; that one is Bobo.

Complex Sentences

A sentence in which the main clause has one or more subordinate clauses is a complex sentence. A main clause may be joined to a subordinate clause in different ways.

A subordinate clause may begin with a subordinating conjunction. The most common subordinating conjunctions (some of which are also used as adverbs or prepositions) include:

after	since	where
although	so	whether because	that	while before	though	why how	unless if	when

Show me how you do that.

I used to ski when I lived in Switzerland.

Although it was late, he didn't feel tired.

Stay here while I go and get some food.

You'll be assigned to a team since you didn't choose one.

Unlike the other subordinating conjunctions, that can often be omitted.

The manufacturers claim (that) the drug works.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 20 SESS: 66 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:37 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

For many more examples, see the individual dictionary entries.

A subordinate clause may also begin with a relative pronoun. A relative pronoun refers to a noun or noun phrase that was mentioned earlier. The most important relative pronouns are that, which, who, whom, and whose. (Others include whatever, whoever, whomever, and whichever.)

Is there a camera that can take pictures under water?

They're all good; the question is which is the best.

The professor who won the award is retiring.

The clerk whom you spoke to no longer works here.

Do you know whose that is?

Who is more common than whom (its object form) at the beginning of a subordinate clause.

Is that the clerk who [=whom] you spoke to?

The relative pronouns whose and which may also act as relative adjectives, which are simply adjectives that introduce a subordinate clause.

That's the guy whose father is an ambassador.

It wasn't obvious which road led back to the town.

Another way to begin a subordinate clause is with a relative adverb (an adverb that introduces a subordinate clause): where, when, or why.

They're particularly interested in Angola, where there are large oil deposits.

In May, when the lilacs bloom, the fragrance is heavenly.

No one really knew why the marriage had failed.

Subordinate clauses that modify nouns or verbs (rather than function as objects) may be divided into two categories: restrictive clauses and nonrestrictive clauses. A restrictive clause identifies the noun or verb that precedes it and is needed to understand which person or thing is meant.

I preferred the soprano who sang last year.

The only thing that keeps them together is their son.

A nonrestrictive clause adds information about something but is not needed to understand which person or thing is meant.

She had written two books, which had been fairly successful.

My uncle, who I haven't seen in years, works for the government.

Nonrestrictive clauses are separated from the rest of the sentence by one or two commas; restrictive clauses are not separated from the rest of the sentence by commas.

Which may refer to an entire main clause.

He moved out of the apartment the next day, which was fine with her.

She ignored my advice, which surprised me.

When a restrictive clause begins with a relative pronoun or relative adverb, the pronoun or adverb can often be omitted.

The reason (that) he gave wasn't convincing.

That was the year (when) I went to Romania.

She just needs a place (where) she can study.

This is never possible in nonrestrictive clauses, or in clauses where the pronoun is the subject.

He had a magazine, which he had finished reading. [not He had a magazine, he had finished reading.]

They're the relatives who raised me. [not They're the relatives raised me.]

A special kind of restrictive clause, known as an infinitive clause, begins with a to infinitive (the basic form of a verb preceded by to).

She liked to hike in the Scottish Highlands.

It was always fun to work on puzzles together.

For more examples, see Infinitives, p. 1940.

Finally, clauses that begin with if are known as conditional clauses.

If the day is sunny, the ceremony will be held outdoors.

See Conditional Sentences, p. 1950.

Questions

As stated above, a sentence expresses a statement, wish, command, or question. Sentences that express statements or wishes are declarative; sentences that express commands are imperative; and sentences that express questions are interrogative. Since questions have a unique form, we will discuss them explicitly here.

Unlike declarative and imperative sentences, which end in either a period or exclamation point, a question ends with a question mark (?).

Questions are used to ask something. Many questions can be answered with either "yes" or "no"; these are called yes/no questions. All yes/no questions begin with an auxiliary verb or with a form of be.

Should that door be open? (No, it shouldn't.)

Did the prime minister speak yesterday? (Yes, she did.)

Has he talked to his doctor? (No, he hasn't.)

May I call you sometime? (Yes, you may.)

Was there enough food? (No, there wasn't.)

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 21 SESS: 67 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:37 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw-learners-dictionary/101-bm-grammar

Notice that the answers to yes/no questions (such as those in parentheses above) often repeat the auxiliary verb but rarely repeat the main verb except when it is be.

Yes/no questions normally look like ordinary declarative sentences with the words in a different order.

(It's late.) Is it late?

(The streets were empty.) Were the streets empty?

(Their prices are high.) Are their prices high?

If the declarative sentence has only one verb and it is not a form of be, the question must start with a form of do or, in the future tense, will: that is, did (or didn't) for the past tense, does or do (or doesn't or don't) for the present tense, and will (or won't) for the future tense. Since do and will express the tense, the main verb appears as an infinitive.

(He finally got married.) Did he finally get married?

(She knows him well.) Does she know him well?

(They fly north in April.) Do they fly north in April?

(I will leave tomorrow.) Will you leave tomorrow?

If the declarative sentence includes an auxiliary verb (be, have, do, or a modal verb), that verb is usually moved to the beginning.

(The Yankees are losing.) Are the Yankees losing?

(Everyone has gone.) Has everyone gone?

(It actually did happen.) Did it actually happen?

(He'll be back soon.) Will he be back soon?

(That would work better.) Would that work better?

(The boys can have those.) Can the boys have those?

Must is often replaced by a form of do followed by have to.

(Every student must take a few science classes.) Does every student have to take a few science classes?

A question in which have or do is an independent verb (rather than an auxiliary verb) begins with an auxiliary verb.

(They usually have trouble at customs.) Do they usually have trouble at customs?

(The hurricane did a lot of damage.) Did the hurricane do a lot of damage?

Questions that cannot be answered with "yes" or "no" usually begin with an interrogative adjective, adverb, or pronoun: when, what, where, who, whom, whose, why, which, or how. Such questions do not simply reorder the words of a declarative sentence.

(I liked that one best.) Which one did you like best?

(She wants the blue one.) Which one does she want?

(I'll park the car here.) Where will you park the car?

(Fifteen were missing.) How many were missing?

(They've visited twice.) How often have they visited?

(You should go in an hour.) When should I go?

As shown in these sentences, an auxiliary verb still normally precedes the subject in such questions. But if an interrogative pronoun or adjective (usually who, what, which, or whose) refers to the subject of the sentence, no auxiliary verb is needed.

Who wants the last beer?

Which was the right answer?

Which cat is sick?

What trail leads down the mountain?

Whose team finally won?

Yes/no questions are often worded negatively (see Negation, p. 1948). Negative questions do not mean that the speaker thinks the answer is "no"; in fact, people usually ask negative questions when they think the answer will be "yes." In negative questions, not follows the auxiliary verb; it is almost always contracted to -n't.

Won't it be difficult? (Yes, it probably will.)

Weren't the potatoes good? (Yes, they were delicious.)

Wouldn't they prefer to see a movie? (Yes, they probably would.)

Didn't your friends go with you? (Yes, two of them did.)

A positively worded question usually indicates that the speaker truly has no idea what the answer is.

Will you be at the party? (Yes, I'm planning to go. or No, I have other plans.)

In conversation and informal messages, declarative sentences often end with a short question called a tag question.

We don't have time, do we? [=Do we have time?]

If the main clause is negative, the tag question must be positive. If the main clause is positive, the tag question must be negative. A noun subject in the main clause is replaced by a pronoun in the tag question. If the sentence begins with there or it, there or it is repeated in the tag question. The verb in the tag question is always an auxiliary verb. If there is an auxiliary verb in the main clause, it is repeated in the tag question; if the main clause has no auxiliary verb, the tag question uses a form of do.

/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

John wouldn't mind, would he? [=Would John mind?]

They'll all be there, won't they? [=Won't they all be there?]

There isn't any tea, is there? [=Is there any tea?]

It was cold, wasn't it? [=Wasn't it cold?]

Elena retired last year, didn't she? [=Didn't Elena retire last year?]

You work in Singapore, don't you? [=Don't you work in Singapore?]

In conversation, a declarative sentence can be turned into a question by simply ending the sentence with rising intonation in the voice. In writing, this is shown by using a question mark rather than a period.

They're going to shut down the company?

OTHER GRAMMAR TOPICS

Possession

The normal way to show possession is to add -'s or -' to the end of the name or noun. A singular noun normally takes -'s. A plural noun that ends in an /s/or /z/sound takes simply -'. A noun with an irregular plural takes -'s.

the cat's tail

Marcos's teacher

the Beatles' second drummer

the children's cookies

A possessive adjective (see p. 1933) or possessive pronoun (p. 1928) can often be used instead of a name or noun.

Lisa took her grandmother to the fair.

Our car needs to be replaced.

The dog has lost its collar.

The last house on the street is theirs.

Yours is newer than mine.

Note that the possessive adjective its has no apostrophe. It's (with an apostrophe) is a contraction of "it is" ("It's getting late") or "it has" ("It's gotten late").

A less common and more formal way to show possession is with of. Of is normally used when a thing, rather than a person or animal, has possession.

the campus of the university =the university's campus

the role of the government =the government's role

Of is rarely used to show possession of something that can be touched or held.

Mrs. Klein's cat [not the cat of Mrs. Klein]

Apposition

When two nouns or noun phrases in the same sentence refer to the same thing, the two are said to be in apposition to one another.

Cairo, Africa's largest city, is the cultural center of the Arab world.

A fluent speaker of Finnish, Sirpa was very helpful with the tourists.

The choir performed "Elijah Rock," a spiritual arranged by Moses Hogan.

They interviewed the novelist J. K. Rowling.

Negation

A negative statement expresses denial or refusal. To negate a statement is to change its meaning so that it is negative; this process is called negation. A small group of words is used for negation, and all of them start with n-.

Not is the most common negating word. It is normally used with a verb as part of a contraction (isn't, shouldn't, etc.) in spoken English. Not can be used to negate nouns, verbs, adjectives, and adverbs.

He isn't a Catholic.

She's not going anywhere.

Those aren't blue.

They hoped it wasn't too long.

The other negating words are no, none, nothing, nobody, no one, nowhere, and never.

Nobody told me about it.

There'll be nothing left for us.

It never happened.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 23 SESS: 77 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:37 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

See the individual dictionary entries for many more examples of how these words are used.

Negating a sentence in the simple present or simple past tense requires a form of do with not.

These colors don't match.

The bus didn't arrive on time.

In sentences with modal verbs, not follows the modal verb immediately, often forming a contraction.

It can't be true.

The children shouldn't stay out too late.

The train won't leave until 4:10.

The same is true for the other auxiliary verbs.

They aren't coming this spring.

She hadn't traveled in Africa since she was in college.

He doesn't work there with us anymore.

Only one negative word is required to make a clause negative. Using two negative words in a clause produces an error called a double negative.

I don't know anything about it. or I know nothing about it. [not I don't know nothing about it.]

However, a sentence with more than one clause can have more than one negation.

I've never heard that, and I don't believe it.

She won't tell us who wasn't there.

Three common adverbs—hardly, barely, and scarcely—may have the effect of negation; they should not be used with another negative word.

I can barely hear you. [not I can't barely hear you.]

There's hardly any time left. [not There isn't hardly any time left.]

She had been gone scarcely five minutes. [not She hadn't been gone scarcely five minutes.]

Comparison

In grammar, comparison means stating that something has more or less of a quality or amount than something else has.

Comparisons of Quality

To compare a quality that is possessed by two nouns (or noun phrases or pronouns) or two verbs, we use the comparative form of an adjective or adverb, which is normally formed by adding -er to a one-syllable adjective or adverb and to many two-syllable adjectives and adverbs. If the word ends with a short vowel and a consonant and is accented on the last syllable, the final consonant of the adjective or adverb is usually doubled. If the word ends in a silent -e, the -e is omitted. If it ends in -y, the y usually changes to i.

smart (adj.)	She's no smarter than me.
fat (adj.)	He's fatter than he used to be.
late (adj.)	It's later than I thought.
early (adj. or adv)	They took an earlier train. I arrived earlier than they did.

For longer adjectives (including many two-syllable adjectives) and almost all adverbs, the comparative is formed by using more or less instead.

patriotic (adj.)	He's more patriotic than his brother.
traditional (adj.)	Their Easter service is less traditional than ours.
readily (adv.)	He responded less readily this time than before.
harshly (adv.)	The older kids were punished more harshly.

More and less are never used with an adjective or adverb with an added -er ending.

This test was easier than the last one. [not This test was more easier than the last one.]

Notice that than always comes between the two items being compared. But if one item was mentioned previously, a than phrase may not be needed.

They drank all the wine almost immediately; the liquor lasted longer.

When comparing three or more things, we use the superlative form. For a short adjective or adverb, the superlative is normally formed by adding -est. For longer words, we instead use most or least. The almost always precedes a superlative adjective and often precedes a superlative adverb.

smart (adj.)	This paper was written by the smartest student.
neurotic (adj.)	She's the least neurotic person in the world.
early (adj. or adv.)	They took the earliest train. Who got up (the) earliest?
readily (adv.)	Oranges are most readily available in winter here.

Most and least are never used before an adjective or adverb with an -est ending.

That was the hardest part of the exam. [not That was the most hardest part of the exam.]

The normal comparative and superlative forms for adjectives and adverbs are shown at their individual dictionary entries. The labels [more ~; most ~] are used for adjectives and adverbs that use

/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

more and most as their comparative and superlative forms. The labels [also more ~; most ~] and [or more ~; most ~] are used for adjectives and adverbs that can be used with the normal comparative and superlative forms but that often or sometimes use more and most as their comparative and superlative forms instead.

A few common adjectives and adverbs have irregular comparative and superlative forms.

basic form	comparative	superlative good (adj.)	better	best well (adv.)	better	best bad (adj. or adv.)	worse	worst badly (adv.)	worse	worst little (adj. or adv.)	less	least much (adj. or adv.)	more	most some (adj.)	more	most many (adj.)	more	most
far (adj. or adv.)	further/ farther	furthest/ farthest

To say that two qualities are equal, we use as . . . as with the adjective or adverb (or the adjective or adverb phrase) between the two words.

She's almost as old as her aunt.

My pickup isn't as easy to drive as my car.

They're not as happy with it as they used to be.

Comparisons of Quantity

To compare the amount or number of things, we use more, most, less, least, and other words to modify nouns (rather than adjectives or adverbs). For greater amounts or numbers, we use more and (the) most. For smaller amounts or numbers, we use fewer and (the) fewest for count nouns, and less and (the) least for noncount nouns.

This box holds more discs than that one.

Who owns the most land?

There were ten fewer accidents this year.

February has the fewest days.

Kuwait has less oil than Iraq.

He always tries to do the least work possible.

However, for numbers that are thought of as making up a single sum or a whole, it is normal to use less rather than fewer.

She had less than $30 in her purse.

You can't join if you're less than 21 years old.

Because of this, even native English speakers often use less/fewer and least/fewest inconsistently.

More and less can also be used to compare amounts of an activity.

She worries about it more than I do.

Each year they travel less than the year before.

To say that two quantities are equal, we use as many . . . as or as few . . . as for count nouns, and as much . . . as or as little . . . as for noncount nouns.

You don't have as many cousins as he does.

I never made as much money as she made.

As much as and as little as (with no word in the middle) can also be used to compare quantities of an activity.

He doesn't run as much as I do.

Conditional Sentences

An important type of subordinate clause (see p. 1945) begins with the conjunction if. If clauses are used to say that something is true or likely or valid only under certain conditions. They are also used for talking about things that failed to happen in the past and things that cannot be true. Since sentences with if clauses talk about situations that require certain conditions, they are called conditional sentences.

Conditional sentences may use different combinations of verb tenses. The verb form used in the if clause depends on whether the clause is talking about a condition in the past, the present, or the future, or about something that is always true. The verb form in the main clause depends on these same things, and may also depend on which verb form is used in the if clause.

The simplest conditional sentences are about the present or the future. They express a result that occurs, or will occur, when the condition in the if clause is true.

If it rains today, I'll cut the grass tomorrow.

Sentences of this type generally use the present tense in the if clause and the future tense (with either will or going to) in the main clause. Unless can be used instead of If . . . not.

We are going to go tomorrow if the weather is not bad.

We are going to go tomorrow unless the weather is bad.

See the entry for unless for more examples.

To speak of a condition that is not true, the if clause uses the past subjunctive, and the main clause uses would.

If he were a better listener, he would remember what you said.

I would order something if there were anything good on the menu.

If you respected me, you*'d take off* that ridiculous hat.

To discuss something that failed to happen, or something that is believed to be impossible, the if

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 25 SESS: 77 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:38 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw-learners-dictionary/101-bm-grammar clause uses the past perfect tense, and the main clause uses a modal perfect (see p. 1939).

If it had snowed any more, we couldn't have driven home.

I might have called if I had known you were here.

If they had had more time, they would have finished.

To discuss a future possibility, an if clause may use were to with the infinitive.

If he were to die, who would inherit the house?

Reporting Speech and Writing

There are two ways to report what another person has said or written. One way, called direct speech or quotation, repeats the exact language, enclosed in quotation marks.

He added, "I really have to leave soon."

"It's an absolute disaster," she said, "the worst we've ever seen."

The hospital's report began: "The senator's condition has improved slightly overnight."

See also Quotation Marks, p. 1972.

The other way to report what another person has said or written, called indirect speech, puts the meaning of the person's words, rather than the precise words, into a subordinate clause.

("We have cows and a peach orchard.") She says (that) they have cows and a peach orchard. /She said (that) they had cows and a peach orchard.

As shown by the parentheses around it, the subordinating conjunction that often introduces indirect speech but is usually not required. (See Complex Sentences, p. 1945.) Notice that the original speech uses the present tense ("have"), but when the verb used to report the indirect speech is in the past tense, the tense of the indirect speech normally changes also.

The verb used to report indirect speech may be in the present tense when what is being reported was said recently or is from a piece of writing.

("I'm calling them weekly.") He says he is calling them weekly.

("Home prices have risen 6 percent since last year.") The report says (that) home prices have risen 6 percent since last year.

Notice that the verb in the indirect speech does not change.

More commonly, however, the verb used to report indirect speech is in the past tense and causes the verb in the indirect speech to change. The list below shows how the original tense usually changes when it is reported with a verb in the past tense in the normal way.

original tense	after "said," "asked," etc.
present	present or past present perfect	past perfect
present progressive	imperfect
future with will	would + infinitive
future with be going to	was/were going to + infinitive
past	past or past perfect imperfect	imperfect or past perfect progressive past perfect	(no change)

("She is doing very well.") The teacher said (that) she is doing very well. The teacher said (that) she was doing very well.

("We*'ve tried* everything.") They said (that) they had tried everything.

("When are you coming?") She asked when we were coming.

("We will make a large profit next year.") The company said (that) it would make a large profit next year.

("The boat is going to leave without us!") He yelled that the boat was going to leave without us.

("She failed her exams last month.") She told me (that) she failed her exams last month. She told me (that) she had failed her exams last month.

("He was sleeping when I called.") He said (that) he was sleeping when I called. He said (that) he had been sleeping when I called.

("They had left just a few minutes earlier.") Someone said (that) they had left just a few minutes earlier.

Notice that in indirect speech a period replaces any question mark or exclamation mark at the end.

Reporting a spoken or written sentence that includes a modal verb requires the following changes.

original	after "said," "asked," etc.
can	could
may	might or could must	had to shall	would will	would

("Charles must go back immediately.") He said that Charles had to go back immediately.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 26 SESS: 79 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 14:44:38 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/101−bm−grammar

("The situation won't be getting better soon.") She wrote that the situation wouldn't be getting better soon.

However, if the person being quoted spoke recently, or if a document is being quoted, "says," "asks," etc., may be used, in which case the present tense can also be used in the indirect speech.

He says that Charles must go back immediately.

She writes that the situation won't be getting better soon.

The other modal verbs (ought, could, might, should, and would) and the near-modal verb have to usually employ the same verb for the past tense.

("I could take the job in Uruguay instead.") He said he could take the job in Uruguay instead.

("We have to make a decision this year.") They told me that they had to make a decision this year.

There are three cases in which the tense in indirect speech often does not change: (1) when the speech reported is something that is true all the time, (2) when the speech is reported immediately and concerns something not yet in the past, and (3) when the speech uses the future to make a prediction.

("Global warming affects everyone.") He agreed that global warming affects everyone.

("The train is about to depart.") She just told me the train is about to depart.

("She*'ll be* very successful in life.") He said she*'ll be* very successful in life.

Questions in indirect speech are treated in two different ways. For a yes/no question (see p. 1946), the reporting clause begins with if or whether (these two words have the same meaning in such sentences) and the verb appears in regular sentence order.

("Do you eat meat?") She asked if I eat/ate meat.

("Can you stay any longer?") He asked whether I could stay any longer.

If the question begins with "when," "which," "why," "who," "whose," "what," "where," or "how," the reported question uses the same word but puts the verb after the subject.

("Where is my coat?") She asked where her coat was.

("How long have you lived here?") He asked me how long I had lived here.

A command, instruction, or invitation is reported as an infinitive with to.

("Get out.") He told us to get out.

Omitted Words

English sentences usually omit a word when the same word is used either earlier or later in the sentence. The omitted word may be a noun, pronoun, verb, adjective (including an article), adverb, preposition, or conjunction. The word normally would have followed and, or, or but. (When a noun is omitted, it often would have preceded the conjunction.)

No one could lift the largest (stones) and heaviest stones.

He closed the window and (he) turned out the light.

In the evening she liked to read or (liked to) play the piano.

A horse or (a) cow had knocked down the gate.

The speech was very long and (very) boring.

Most of the oil came from Nigeria or (from) Angola.

They were offered a choice: pasta, (or) potatoes, or rice.

A word should only be omitted when the words that are being linked represent the same part of speech (largest/heaviest, closed/turned out, horse/cow, etc.).

Irregular Verbs

The following list shows the infinitive, past-tense, and past-participle forms for the irregular verbs in this dictionary. All verbs with the same final element are grouped together; thus, outdo, overdo, redo, and undo all appear immediately after do rather than in alphabetical order.

A regular English verb forms its past tense and past participle by adding -ed to its infinitive: for example, trust ("We trust her"), trusted ("In those days we trusted her"), trusted ("We have always trusted her"). A verb is considered regular if, when the -ed is added,

- the infinitive's final consonant is doubled (stop, stopped, stopped)
- its final silent -e is dropped (die, died, died)
- its final -y changes to -i- (hurry, hurried, hurried)
- its final -c changes to -ck- (panic, panicked, panicked)

A verb is considered irregular if

- either the past tense or the past participle lacks -ed (swim, swam, swum; mean, meant, meant)
- either the past tense or the past participle has a variant form that lacks -ed (burn, burned or burnt, burned or burnt)

Contractions

English-speakers very often shorten (or contract) nine common words in speech. Eight are verbs: have, has, had, is, am, are, will, and would. One is an adverb: not. These words are also often shortened in informal writing. The shortened form of the word is attached to the word that comes before it; in writing, an apostrophe (') takes the place of the omitted letters.

The table below shows how the eight verbs are contracted when they follow a personal pronoun.

I have	I've	you have	you've	she has	she's	they have	they've
I had	I'd	you had	you'd	he had	he'd	we had	we'd
I am	I'm	you are	you're	it is	it's	we are	we're
I will	I'll	you will	you'll	he will	he'll	they will	they'll
I would	I'd	you would	you'd	she would	she'd	we would	we'd
I would have	I'd have; I would've	you would have	you'd have; you would've	it would have	it would've; it'd have	they would have	they'd have; they would've

Note that -'s can stand for either is or has. (It can also form the possessive case, as in "Sarah's dog.") The contracted form -'d can stand for either had or would. In questions, -'d sometimes stands for did ("Where'd he go?" "Why'd you do it?").

Contractions are commonly formed with other pronouns as well: "Who's that?" "What's happening?" "Someone's coming," "Who'd have guessed it?" "That'll be all," "This'll work." They are also often formed with nouns: "Michael's here," "The coffee's hot," "Time's passing," etc. And they are often used with here and there: "Here's the book," "There'd be plenty of food."

Contractions are often formed by adding -'ve to the modal verbs would, could, should, and might: "Argentina could've won," "Those should've been better," "I might've known. "

The adverb not can be shortened to -n't and attached to the following verbs:

are	aren't	has	hasn't	ought	oughtn't can	can't	have	haven't	should	shouldn't could	couldn't	is	isn't	was	wasn't did	didn't	might	mightn't	were	weren't do	don't	must	mustn't	will	won't does	doesn't	need	needn't	would	wouldn't had	hadn't

Note that will/won't is the only irregular example.

The contraction let's (let us) is common even in formal writing. Ain't (am not, are not, is not, have not, has not) is common in very informal speech but never used in formal writing. Y'all (you all) is common in speech in the American South.

In American writing that is intended to represent very informal speech, the final -g in words ending in -ing may be replaced with an apostrophe: seein', hopin', movin', etc. Other shortenings of single words include 'em (them) and 'n' (and).

Writing that imitates very informal speech may include words that represent combinations of two words without an apostrophe, including:

betcha (bet you)	gotcha (got you)	sorta (sort of) coulda (could have)	gotta (got to)	wanna (want to) dunno (don't know)	kinda (kind of)	whatcha (what are you, what do you, what have you)
gimme (give me)	lemme (let me)
gonna (going to)	shoulda (should have)	woulda (would have)

English Word Roots

Most words in English are based on Greek and Latin. By learning the common Greek and Latin roots (basic words or word parts from which other words are formed), you can better understand and remember the meaning of many English words. The most useful roots are listed below. For other common English word parts, see Prefixes and Suffixes, page 1958.

Words That Are Often Confused

Because English has a large vocabulary and English spelling is difficult, even native speakers sometimes write a word that looks and sounds similar to the word they are thinking of but has a different meaning. The words below are the ones that native speakers most often confuse.

The definitions that are shown here are very short. You can find full definitions for these words in the dictionary.

When a word is commonly used as two different parts of speech, labels indicate which these are: (n) noun, (pron) pronoun, (vb) verb, (adj) adjective, (adv) adverb, (prep) preposition, (conj) conjunction.

Spelling Rules

Since English evolved from many different sources, English words can be difficult to spell, even for native English-speakers.

Regular and irregular spellings for pluralized nouns, comparative and superlative forms of adjectives, verb tenses, and adverbs ending in -ly are shown at the entries in this dictionary. Here we provide the basic rules that determine most of these spellings along with some other general rules for spelling English words.

Nouns

- Most regular plurals are formed by simply adding -s: car, cars.
- For nouns ending in -s, -x, -z, -ch, or -sh, add -es: loss, losses; box, boxes; blitz, blitzes; lunch, lunches; dish, dishes.
- For nouns ending in -y, change the y to i and add -es: academy, academies. For nouns ending in a -y that comes after a vowel, add -s: alley, alleys.
- For a few nouns ending in -f or -fe, change the -f or -fe to -ves: calf, calves; elf, elves; half, halves; hoof, hooves; knife, knives; leaf, leaves; life, lives; loaf, loaves; self, selves; shelf, shelves; thief, thieves; wife, wives; wolf, wolves.
- For some nouns ending in an -o that comes after a consonant, form the plural by adding -es: cargo, cargoes; echo, echoes; hero, heroes; motto, mottoes; potato, potatoes; tomato, tomatoes.
- For some nouns of Latin origin ending in -a, add -e: larva, larvae; vertebra, vertebrae. For some nouns of Latin origin ending in -um, replace the -um with -a: bacterium, bacteria; quantum, quanta. For some nouns of Latin origin ending in -us, replace the -us with -i: alumnus, alumni; fungus, fungi.
- For words of Greek origin ending in -is, substitute -es: analysis, analyses; basis, bases; crisis, crises; oasis, oases.
- For many animals, use the same spelling for both singular and plural forms: moose, moose; sheep, sheep.
- Some plural forms of nouns are completely irregular: foot, feet; mouse, mice; goose, geese.

Adjectives

- To form regular comparatives and superlatives of one-syllable adjectives and some two-syllable adjectives, add -er and -est: warm, warmer, warmest; clever, cleverer, cleverest. Do not double a final -e: nice, nicer, nicest.
- When a final -y follows a consonant, form the comparative and superlative by changing the y to i and adding -er and -est: lazy, lazier, laziest.
- When a one-syllable word ends in a consonant that follows a single vowel, double the consonant before adding -er or -est: mad, madder, maddest.
- When forming an adjective by adding the suffix -able to a verb, remove the verb's final -e: cure, curable; advise, advisable. Do not remove the -e when it comes after c or g: enforce, enforceable; manage, manageable. When the word ends in -y, change the y to i: deny, deniable; rely, reliable.

Verbs

- To form the present-tense third-person singular form of regular verbs, simply add -s: work, works. Add -es for verbs ending in -s, -x, -z, -ch, or -sh: bless, blesses; fix, fixes; buzz, buzzes; teach, teaches; wish, wishes.
- For almost all verbs ending in an -e that comes after a consonant, remove the e before adding -ed or -ing: arrange, arranged, arranging.
- For regular verbs ending in a vowel followed by -e, form the past tense by removing the e before adding -ed: agree, agreed; lie, lied; hoe, hoed; argue, argued.
- For regular verbs ending in a -y that comes after a consonant, form the past tense and past participle by changing the y to i and adding -ed: carry, carried.
- For verbs ending in -ac or -ic, add -k when forming the past tense, past participle, and present participle: traffic, trafficked, trafficking.
- For verbs ending in a consonant following a single vowel and stressed on the final syllable, double the final consonant (except v, w, x, and y) when forming the tenses: admit, admitted, admitting; grab, grabbed, grabbing; hum, hummed, humming.

/data31/webster/dict/mw−learners−dictionary/107−bm−spelling−rules

Adverbs

- Form most adverbs by simply adding -ly to an adjective: tight, tightly.
- When the adjective ends in -y, change the y to i and add -ly: dreamy, dreamily; merry, merrily.
- When the adjective ends in -ic, add -ally in almost all cases: academic, academically; artistic, artistically; athletic, athletically.
- When the adjective ends in -ll, remove one l before adding -ly: full, fully.

Other Rules

- The letters j, q, x, and y are never doubled in English words, and a, h, i, k, u, v, and w are almost never doubled. (Exceptions: aardvark, bazaar; hitchhike, roughhouse, withhold; shiitake, skiing; jackknife, knickknack; continuum, muumuu, vacuum; divvy, savvy; glowworm, powwow.)
- English words never end in j or q, and they almost never end in v.
- The letter q is always followed by u in English words: quick, mystique.
- When i and e come together to produce an /i:/ sound, the e normally follows the i: believe, cookie, piece. (Exceptions: caffeine, leisure, protein, seize, weird.) When both letters follow c, the i normally follows the e: ceiling, receive, conceit. (People commonly use a rhyme to remember the rule: "i before e except after c.")
- When i and e come together to produce an /eɪ/ sound, the i follows the e: eighty, freight, neighbor, weigh.
- When i and e come together following a c that is pronounced /ʃ/, the i comes before the e: ancient, sufficient.
- When a prefix is added to a word, the spelling of the original word does not change: read, reread; spell, misspell; necessary, unnecessary.
- If a word ends with a silent -e, the -e is dropped before adding a suffix that begins with a vowel: sense, sensory; race, racism. The final -e is kept if it comes after a soft c or g: notice, noticeable; change, changeable. (Exception: The -e is generally dropped before -ing: notice, noticing; change, changing.)
- The letter c produces the /s/sound only before the vowels e, i, and y: center, cinema, cycle. It produces the /k/ sound elsewhere: act, cause, corner, cut. (Exceptions: Celt, soccer.)
- The letter g produces the /ʤ/ sound only before the vowels e, i, and y: genius, giant, Gypsy. (Exception: margarine.)

American vs. British Spelling

British spelling differs from American spelling in a few ways, mostly because of the spelling reforms that Noah Webster carried out in the U.S. beginning in the 1780s. Several common differences are shown below.

-e- /-ae-: In words derived from Greek, British English often uses the Greek spelling -ae-:

AMERICAN	BRITISH
anemia	anaemia
eon	aeon
orthopedics	orthopaedics
primeval	primaeval

-e- /-oe-: In words derived from Greek, British English often uses the Greek spelling -oe-:

AMERICAN	BRITISH
diarrhea	diarrhoea gonorrhea	gonorrhoea homeopathic	homoeopathic
maneuver	manoeuvre

-er /-re: The -er/-re difference is seen at the ends of many words:

AMERICAN	BRITISH
center	centre
fiber	fibre
meter	metre
theater	theatre

-l- /-ll-: In British English, the final -l of a verb is doubled when -ed or -ing is added at the end, even when the stress does not fall on the last syllable:

AMERICAN	BRITISH
counseled	counselled
dialed	dialled
equaling	equalling
traveling	travelling

-or- /-our-: The spelling -our- in words in British English often appears as -or- in words in American English, especially in an unstressed final syllable:

AMERICAN	BRITISH
color	colour
favorite	favourite
honor	honour
humor	humour

-ze /-se: Words that end in -ize and -yze in American English are often spelled -ise and -yse in British English:

AMERICAN	BRITISH
analyze	analyse
criticize	criticise
memorize	memorise
paralyze	paralyse

Unlike abbreviations in American English, an abbreviation in British English usually does not have a period at the end if its last letter is the same as the last letter of the word being abbreviated: Mr./Mr (for Mister), St./St (for Saint or Street), Dr./Dr (for Doctor), Ltd. (for Limited), etc.

Many other spelling differences affect only individual words.

AMERICAN	BRITISH
airplane	aeroplane
jewelry	jewellery
jail	gaol
tire	tyre

The Spelling of Different Sounds in English

In English pronunciation, many individual sounds may be spelled in several ways. The following list shows, in boldface type, the most common ways of spelling each sound, followed by an example. If you know how a word is pronounced but are not sure how to spell it, this list may help you to find it in the dictionary.

Some words may be pronounced in different ways. When a word appears in italics below, this means that the sound being illustrated is not used in every pronunciation of the word.

Sometimes a sound is pronounced in a word but is not represented by any letter in that word. In such cases, a dash (–) appears where the boldface spelling of the sound would be, and the word's full pronunciation is shown, as in the last two entries at /ə/:

– chasm /ˈkæzəm/
– McCoy /məˈkoɪ/

A dash and the full pronunciation of a word are also shown when it is difficult to know which letter or letters represent a particular sound in the word, as in the last entry at /ʧ/:

– nature /ˈneɪʧɚ/

Handbook of Style

This section deals with the elements of written English that do not include grammar, spelling, or choice of words. It discusses the use of punctuation, capital letters, and italic type, and the special problems in writing compounds, abbreviations, and numbers.

Punctuation

Apostrophe ’

1. The apostrophe is used with nouns and some pronouns to show that a person or thing belongs to someone or something. This form of a noun or pronoun is called the possessive (see Possession, page 1948). If the noun or pronoun is singular, the possessive is formed by adding -’s.

the dog’s owner

someone’s idea

If a noun is plural, the possessive is usually formed by adding just an apostrophe.

most birds’ eggs

the Johnsons’ house

2. The apostrophe is used in contractions and numbers to show that some letters or digits have been omitted.

didn’t [=did not] they’re [=they are] the ’80s and ’90s [=the 1980s and 1990s]

3. The apostrophe is used in the plurals of letters and numbers, and often in the plurals of abbreviations.

two A’s

a row of 8’s

several NGO’s or several NGOs

Brackets (or Square Brackets) [ ]

Brackets are used around words or letters that have been added to quoted text.

His letter of November 2 ends: “By the way, did B[eaverbrook] mention it?”

“In my Father’s house are many mansions [i.e., rooms].”

See also Parentheses, p. 1972.

Colon :

1. The colon introduces a word or phrase that gives more detail about the word or phrase that comes before it. When a full sentence follows the colon, its first word is often capitalized.

That year she took up a new sport: tennis.

They had reached a decision: The defendant was guilty.

2. The colon introduces a list or series.

Five of the crew members chose to go: Crawford, Sunshine, King, Gilbert, and Loretucci.

3. The colon may introduce quotations.

His father had followed Emerson’s rule: “Never read any book that is not a year old.”

Together the class recited the well-known lines from Shakespeare:

> This happy breed of men, this little world,
> This precious stone set in the silver sea,
> This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England

4. The colon separates titles from subtitles.

the biography Einstein: His Life and Universe

Comma ,

1. The comma separates independent clauses joined by and, or, but, so, yet, for, or nor.

The bar was closing, and the last two customers were finishing their drinks.

The trial had lasted nine months, but the jury needed only four hours to reach its verdict.

2. The comma separates adverbial words, clauses, and phrases from the rest of a sentence.

In fact, no one seemed to have heard of him.

They concluded, however, that she had told the truth.

Having lost five games, we were almost desperate.

The storm, after a short pause, revived with even greater fury.

3. The comma is used after words and phrases that introduce examples.

First she called two friends, Soraya and Magda.

4. The comma separates words and phrases in a series. (Some writers always omit the comma before and and or.)

Geese, ducks, and chickens shared the large pen.

He had already showered, shaved, and dressed.

There were no sheets, blankets, or pillows.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 2 SESS: 29 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 12:29:50 2008
/data31/webster/dict/mw-learners-dictionary/109-bm-handbook-of-style

5. The comma usually separates two or more ordinary adjectives that come before a noun.

the shiny, orange fabric

her cool, formal, elegant style

If the first adjective applies to everything that follows it, the comma is omitted.

her first major defeat

the only clean plate

a good used car

6. A comma usually separates a word or phrase from a noun that it identifies or defines and that comes immediately before or after it. If the word or phrase comes in the middle of a sentence, another comma separates it from the rest of the sentence.

We visited Gettysburg, site of the famous Civil War battle.

One of the book's authors, Julia Child, went on to become a television icon.

7. The comma usually separates a direct quotation from a phrase (such as "he said" or "Jane replied") that shows who is being quoted. A comma at the end of a quotation is always placed inside the quotation marks. Commas are not used after question marks or exclamation points.

Kate whispered, "It's time to go."

"I suspect," Gregory observed, "that we'll see them again."

"Would anyone like some salad?" she asked.

"Go to bed right now!" he shouted.

8. The comma is used before a short question (called a tag question) that sometimes occurs in conversation at the end of a sentence.

"We can't stay here, can we?"

"It's almost lunchtime, isn't it?"

9. The comma usually divides the digits of a number into groups of three. See Numbers, p. 1975.

Dash —

1. The dash marks a sudden change or break in a sentence.

All the younger officers would remain loyal to the new ruler—or perhaps they wouldn't.

He'd always done every job they had asked him to—even the most ridiculous ones—and he'd had enough.

2. The dash may introduce a phrase that defines a word that precedes it.

The marriage was annulled—that is, declared invalid.

3. The dash, like the colon, may introduce a list:

Her duties were the ordinary ones—cleaning, cooking, shopping, and sometimes looking after the children.

Ellipsis . . .

1. The ellipsis indicates that words have been omitted from a quoted sentence. The second and third examples below are shortened versions of the first.

"Is it so bad, then, to be misunderstood? Pythagoras was misunderstood, and Socrates, and Jesus, and Luther, and Copernicus, and Galileo, and Newton, and every pure and wise spirit that ever took flesh. To be great is to be misunderstood."

"Is it so bad, then, to be misunderstood? Pythagoras was misunderstood, and Socrates, and Jesus, . . . To be great is to be misunderstood."

"Is it so bad, then, to be misunderstood? . . . To be great is to be misunderstood."

2. The ellipsis indicates a pause or an unfinished sentence in speech.

"Are you . . . Are the two of you . . . in love?"

Exclamation Point !

1. The exclamation point ends a sentence, word, or phrase that expresses strong emotion (such as surprise or anger).

The jewels were gone!

Excellent!

Absolutely not!

2. The exclamation point may end a word or phrase that interrupts a sentence to express a strong emotion.

The children—thank God!—weren't there when it happened.

Hyphen -

1. The hyphen is often used to link words to form a compound. (See Compounds, p. 1973.)

a cost-effective program

three light-years

an up-to-date list

2. The hyphen is used in spelled-out numbers.

forty-one years old

his forty-first birthday

3. The hyphen is used between numbers and dates, with the meaning "to" or "up to and including." (In printed material, a slightly longer dash is used.)

pages 112–18

served as secretary-general 1995–99

Vacation dates are Dec. 20–Jan. 12.

4. The hyphen is used between two nouns or numbers, with the meaning "to," "and," or "versus." (In printed material, a slightly longer dash is used.)

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 3 SESS: 29 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 12:29:50 2008

a New York–Paris flight

the last Sampras–Agassi match

a final score of 7–2

5. The hyphen is used to divide a word at the end of a line.

In 1975 smallpox was declared completely eradicated by the World Health Organization.

6. The hyphen separates a prefix from a capitalized word, and may separate a suffix from a word that is more than two syllables long.

anti-American industry-wide

Parentheses (or Brackets) ( )

1. Parentheses are used around words, phrases, clauses, and sentences that give examples, explanations, or additional facts. Within a sentence, a phrase in parentheses may end with an exclamation point, a question mark, or quotation marks; it may not end with a period except after an abbreviation.

The government believes this is unnecessary. (We're hoping that will change.)

Four computers (all outdated models) were replaced.

His prose was awkward (he had never really learned to shape a good paragraph), and he struggled with even the simplest writing tasks.

The music there is always extremely loud (are all young people deaf?).

On bad days he yells a lot ("No one here knows how to do their job!"), but he's usually pleasant enough.

There were photos of most of the major stars of the 1950s (Doris Day, Humphrey Bogart, Marlon Brando, Marilyn Monroe, etc.).

2. Parentheses are used around numbers or letters that indicate individual items in a series within a sentence.

They were concerned about three security issues: (1) ports, (2) air flights, and (3) national borders.

Period (or Full Stop) .

1. The period ends a sentence or sentence fragment that is not a question or an exclamation.

Few travelers ever dared to enter the forest.

Tell me about it.

Unlikely. In fact, impossible.

Only one period comes at the end of a sentence, even if the sentence ends with a quoted sentence or an abbreviation.

She especially liked the sentence, "Leda Rubin has been the true spirit of Blake Business Machines, Inc."

2. A period ends most abbreviations, especially in American writing.

Peter R. Addington, Jr.	vegetables, grains, etc.
Dr. Rosenberg	Sept. 16
11 p.m.	American Dental Assn.

See Abbreviations, p. 1975.

Question Mark ?

A question mark ends a direct question, but not an indirect question.

Was anyone seen on the street after midnight?

She asked whether anyone had been seen on the street after midnight.

Quotation Marks, Double (or Inverted Commas) " "

1. Quotation marks are used around direct quotations, but not indirect quotations.

"I'm leaving," she whispered. "This meeting could go on forever."

She whispered that she was leaving.

2. Quotation marks are used around words or phrases borrowed from others.

The military term "collateral damage" often refers to the deaths of civilians.

3. Quotation marks are used around titles of songs, poems, stories, essays, and articles.

"Over the Rainbow" was chosen by Americans as the most beloved song of the 20th century.

Frost's most famous poem is "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening."

The first detective story was probably Poe's "The Murders in the Rue Morgue."

Thoreau's essay "Civil Disobedience" was studied by Mohandas Gandhi and Martin Luther King.

The article was published in the New Yorker as "The Coming Wars."

4. Quotation marks are used with other punctuation marks as follows:

A period or comma at the end of a quotation is placed inside the quotation marks.

He smiled and said, "I'm happy for you."

"That's ridiculous," she said quickly.

A colon or semicolon is placed outside the quotation marks.

Medals were given to the three "most promising scholars": Hernández, Jeffries, and Yomuro.

She called it her "little house in the country"; to us it looked like a palace.

A dash, question mark, or exclamation point is placed inside the quotation marks when it punctuates the quoted matter only, but outside the quotation marks when it punctuates the larger sentence.

"I can't see how—" he started to say.

He told everyone to bring beach sandals—he called them "flip-flops"—and an umbrella.

She collapsed in her seat with a stunned "Good God!"

"Has anyone seen Emily?" she asked.

What does he mean by "personal reasons"?

Quotation Marks, Single (or Inverted Commas) ' '

1. Single quotation marks are used around a quotation within another quotation.

"I heard him say 'Don't be late,' and then the door closed."

2. Often in British writing, single quotation marks are used around ordinary quoted material, and double quotation marks are used around a quotation within another quotation.

'I heard him say "Don't be late," and then the door closed.'

Semicolon ;

1. The semicolon joins two closely related main clauses. It is used especially when the second clause is introduced by an adverb or a short phrase, such as however, indeed, thus, in that case, as a result, on the other hand, for example, or that is.

Mix the milk and flour; add the eggs and beat well.

The job won't be easy; however, it has to be done.

The boat was two hours late; as a result, they missed their train.

He worried about his wife; that is, he worried that she would worry about him.

2. The semicolon separates phrases or items in a series when they contain commas.

It includes $22 million in land, buildings, and equipment; $34 million in stocks and bonds; and $8 million in cash.

3. The semicolon is placed outside quotation marks and parentheses.

The ambassador again demanded "complete autonomy"; the demand was again rejected.

My mother enjoyed his stories (and even his jokes); my father asked him questions about his work.

Slash (or Oblique) /

1. The slash usually substitutes for or or and/or.

in his/her case

the social/cultural background

2. The slash may replace to or and or a hyphen.

2008/09 (or 2008–09)

the May/June issue (or the May–June issue)

3. The slash is used with numerals in dates and fractions.

8/15/08

a 7/8-mile course

2 3/16 inches wide

4. The slash means per or to when used in a ratio, or when used between units of measure.

their price/earnings ratio

400,000 tons/year [=tons per year]

29 mi/gal [=miles per gallon]

a 50/50 split

5. The slash punctuates a few abbreviations.

w/o [=without]

c/o [=care of]

Compounds

Compounds are words that are made up of two or more words. Compounds may be closed, with no space between the words (for example, airport, bypass), hyphenated (late-night, air-conditioning), or open (black market, love affair). Compounds may be nouns (for example, sailboat), verbs (ice-skate), adjectives (all-night), or any other part of speech. Many common compounds are listed in this dictionary; however, new compounds may be invented by writers for a single use. If a compound is not found in a dictionary, it should either be hyphenated or left open.

1. Compound nouns that consist of longer words are usually left open.

computer program

employment agency

costume designer

2. Compounds that act as adjectives before a noun are usually hyphenated, but not when the individual words of the compound are capitalized.

a made-up excuse higher health-care costs

the Civil War era

a New York restaurant

3. A compound adjective that follows a noun is usually not hyphenated unless it consists of a noun followed by an adjective.

Her fame was well deserved.

Aluminum is rust-resistant.

Capitals and Italics

Beginnings

1. The first word of a sentence or sentence fragment is capitalized.

They make a desert and call it peace.

So many men, so many opinions.

Bravo!

2. The first word of a sentence that is a direct quotation is normally capitalized. If a quoted sentence is interrupted, the second part does not begin with a capital.

She replied, "All he ever wanted was a home he could call his own."

"All he ever wanted," she replied, "was a home he could call his own."

3. The first word of a complete sentence within a sentence is usually capitalized.

As they say, "In unity is strength."

The basic rule is, When in doubt, spell it out.

My first thought was, Who's responsible for this?

4. The first word of a line of poetry is traditionally capitalized, though in modern poetry it is often not capitalized. The poem's original capitalization should not be changed.

Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root,
Tell me, where all past years are,
Or who cleft the Devil's foot.
—John Donne

Proper Nouns and Adjectives

1. Names of people and places, organizations and their members, conferences and councils, and historical periods and events are capitalized.

Noah Webster	the Yalta Conference
Madrid	the Bronze Age
the United Nations	World War I

2. Nouns and adjectives for languages, nationalities, peoples, religious groups, and tribes are capitalized.

Latin and Greek	the Asian continent
Spanish nouns	Asians and Africans
most Spaniards	Muslims
a few Hispanics	a Muslim prayer
Hispanic culture	an Apache
Islam	Apache warriors

3. Adjectives that are formed from people's names and other proper nouns are usually capitalized.

Elizabethan England

the Trojan War

a Himalayan expedition

4. Titles that come before the name of a person are generally capitalized. Titles that are separated from the name by a comma, and titles that are used alone, usually are not capitalized.

President Lincoln

King Henry VIII

Henry VIII, king of England

President Rodríguez

Astropha's president, Salma Rodríguez

Astropha Corp.'s president was there.

5. Words of family relationship are capitalized when used before, or in place of, a person's name.

Uncle Fred's car

on Mother's birthday

6. Words for the supreme being are capitalized.

Allah	the Almighty
Jehovah	in the eyes of God

7. Names of days of the week, months, and holidays and holy days are capitalized, but not names of seasons.

Tuesday	Hanukkah
August	Easter
New Year's Day	winter
Ramadan

8. Words in titles of books, magazines, newspapers, plays, movies, artworks, and musical compositions are capitalized, except for articles (a, an, the), conjunctions (and, but, or, etc.), and short prepositions (by, of, from, etc.). A title's first word is always capitalized. The entire title is set in italics.

J. R. R. Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings

reading National Geographic

the New York Times

Lawrence of Arabia, starring Peter O'Toole

Rodin's sculpture The Thinker

a production of Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro

Titles of newspaper and magazine articles, short stories, and songs are capitalized in the same way, but enclosed in quotation marks rather than italicized.

an article entitled "Solving the Housing Crisis"

Chekhov's famous story "The Black Monk".

"La Marseillaise" is France's national anthem.

9. Trademarks and brand names are capitalized.

Coke	Levi's	Velcro

Other Styling Conventions

1. Italics are often used for letters that are referred to as letters, words that are referred to as words, and numerals that are referred to as numerals.

JOBNAME: Webster's Learners D PAGE: 6 SESS: 29 OUTPUT: Mon Jul 14 12:29:51 2008

The g in align is silent.

Data may be treated as either a singular or a plural noun.

The first 2 and the last 0 are hard to read.

2. Italics are used for emphasis.

He wasn't the vice president, merely a vice president.

"We're leaving right now!"

Abbreviations

The rules listed below are generally followed in American writing. Though these rules are often followed in British writing as well, many British publications omit the periods from most abbreviations (for example, Mr, Mrs, Ms, Dr, Ltd, etc, eg).

1. A period ends most abbreviations that are formed by omitting letters of a single word. However, former abbreviations of this kind that are now considered words do not use a period.

Oct. [=October]	gym [=gymnasium]
Dr. [=Doctor]	ad [=advertisement]

2. Periods are usually omitted from abbreviations made up of single first letters that are capitalized. Uncapitalized abbreviations usually keep their periods.

GOP [=Grand Old Party]

PR [=public relations]

CEO [=chief executive officer]

AM or a.m. [=ante meridiem]

3. A few abbreviations are punctuated with slashes.

c/o [=care of]	w/o [=without]

5. When an abbreviation with a period ends a sentence, its period becomes the sentence's final period.

Renata Shortlidge is employed by Briggs & Strahan Ltd.

5. Abbreviations are capitalized if the words they represent are capitalized.

22° F [=Fahrenheit]

the IRS [=Internal Revenue Service]

on Jan. 6 [=January]

6. Abbreviations are usually all-capitalized when they represent the first letters of uncapitalized words.

IQ [=intelligence quotient]

FYI [=for your information]

7. Most abbreviations that are formed from first letters and pronounced as words are capitalized.

NATO [=North Atlantic Treaty Organization]

NASCAR [=National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing]

8. Abbreviations of given names are followed by a period.

J. Edgar Hoover

T. S. Eliot

V. S. Naipaul

9. The courtesy titles Mr., Mrs., and Ms. occur only as abbreviations today. When followed by a name, Doctor is usually abbreviated, and Professor, Reverend, Senator, and Representative are often abbreviated.

Ms. Rachel A. Downs

Dr. Paul Lazare

Prof. (or Professor) Henry Keys

Sen. (or Senator) Lee Gross

10. Abbreviations are usually made plural by adding -s or -'s.

yrs. [=years]	PCs or PC's
figs. [=figures]	PhDs
HMOs

11. Possessives of abbreviations are formed like ordinary possessives, by adding -'s to singular nouns and an apostrophe to plural nouns.

the CEO's speech	Brown Bros.' ads
Apex Co.'s profits	HMOs' lobbyists

Numbers

1. Numbers from one to nine are generally spelled out; numbers greater than nine are generally shown as figures.

The museum has eight rooms of paintings, containing a total of 155 works.

They sold 700 TV sets during the 10-day sale.

Higher numbers that are not meant to be literal are spelled out.

She had told him a thousand times. [=she had told him many times]

Some writers instead spell out all the numbers from one to ninety-nine, as well as approximate numbers consisting of a whole number plus hundred, thousand, etc.

The island is 161 miles long and only two miles wide.

In the course of four hours, she signed twenty-five hundred copies of her book.

For very large round numbers, it is common to spell out only the word million, billion, etc.

Profits for the year exceeded $7 million.

More than 3.5 billion people live in poverty.

2. If a number begins a sentence, it is written out.

> Sixty-two new bills will be brought before the committee.

3. Numbers of more than three digits are normally written with a comma before each group of three. Commas are not used in street addresses, page numbers, or year numbers.

2,241 cases	2305 Sunset Blvd.
a fee of $12,250	on page 1121
population: 3,466,000	the events of 1985

4. In full dates, commas are generally used before and after the year in American-style dates (which list the month first, followed by the day and year).

> On August 8, 1920, the entire building was destroyed by fire.

British-style dates (which list the day first, followed by the month and year) do not require a comma.

> On 8 August 1920 the entire building was destroyed by fire.

Money

CURRENCY

About half of all English-speaking countries use currencies based on their own dollar ($), divided into 100 cents (¢). The other half use non-dollar currencies, also divided into 100 units.

United States

The basic unit of U.S. currency is the U.S. dollar. Bills are issued with values of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100, although the $2 bill is rarely used. All bills are the same size and have traditionally all been the same green color. The basic color of the bills continues to be green, but some now include other colors as well. U.S. coins are issued with values of 1¢ (a penny), 5¢ (a nickel), 10¢ (a dime), 25¢ (a quarter), 50¢ (a half-dollar), and $1, although the 50¢ and $1 coins are rarely used. A coin's size does not indicate its value; the dime is smaller than the penny and nickel, and the dollar is smaller than the half-dollar. A dollar is often informally called a buck.

United Kingdom

The unit of British currency is the pound (£), which is divided into 100 pence (p). Coins are issued with values of 1p (a penny), 2p, 5p, 10p, 50p, £1, and £2. Bills, or notes, are issued with values of £5, £10, £20, and £50, although the £50 note is rarely used. Informally, a pound is often called a quid, a £10 note is often called a tenner, a £5 note is often called a fiver, and pence (pennies) are usually called simply "p" ("I need another 50p"). A coin's size does not indicate its value; the £1 coin is smaller than the 50p, 10p, and 2p coins.

Canada

The Canadian currency unit is the Canadian dollar. There are $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100 bills, each with its own color. The $1 coin is often called the loonie (the bird on the coin is a loon), and the $2 coin is often called the toonie. Smaller coins are valued at 1¢ (penny), 5¢ (nickel), 10¢ (dime), 25¢ (quarter), and 50¢ (50-cent piece), although the 50¢ coin is rarely used. A coin's size does not indicate its value; the $2 coin, $1 coin, and 50-cent piece are all similar in size, and the dime is smaller than the penny and nickel.

Australia

Australia's currency unit is the Australian dollar. The currency consists of coins of 5¢, 10¢, 20¢, 50¢, $1, and $2, and notes (bills) in various colors with values of $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100. A coin's size does not indicate its value; the $1 and $2 coins are smaller than the 20¢ and 50¢ coins.

CARDS AND CHECKS

Credit cards are plastic cards issued by banks and other institutions. You can use them to pay for items and services, but only up to the amount of your credit limit, which is usually somewhat higher than the amount in your bank account. When the bill arrives each month, you may pay all of what you owe. If you instead choose to pay smaller amounts of money for several months until the full balance has been paid, an interest fee may be added. The interest fee depends on the interest rate of the particular credit card; interest rates can vary a great deal.

You must go through an application process to get an ordinary credit card. Although getting a card does not cost anything, some credit cards require you to pay an annual fee. Some of these cards have no credit limit but require you to pay the entire amount you owe when the bill arrives. If you fail to pay on time, a large fee will be charged.

Credit cards may be used to get loans, or cash advances. However, the interest rate for cash advances is higher than the card's ordinary interest rate. Also, interest begins to be charged immediately, rather than after the first bill arrives.

Debit cards are issued by banks. When you use a debit card to pay for something, you swipe your card through an electronic device and type your personal identification number, or PIN. The money is then immediately removed from your bank account and given to the person or company you are paying.

ATM cards, or cash cards, are issued by banks. By using the card and typing in your PIN at an ATM (automated teller machine), or cashpoint, at any time of day, you can withdraw money from your account, deposit money into the account, find out what your balance is, and make loan payments.

Today, a single card issued by a bank usually serves as a credit card, debit card, and ATM card combined.

A check (or cheque) is a piece of paper that you use to pay for items and services. A check tells your bank to pay a certain amount of money to the person or company you have written the check to. Anyone with a checking account at a bank may write checks. In some countries, you must show a special cheque card or a credit card whenever you write a check for someone. If your checking account does not contain enough money to cover the amount of a check that you have written, the check will bounce and you will have to pay a fee to the bank and write another check.

For numbers above a million, different words were used in American English and British English in the past. However, the American terms are now in official use in the United Kingdom. As a result, both the American terms and the older British terms are found in British English.

	American	British
1,000,000,000	billion	billion or thousand million

1,000,000,000,000,000	quadrillion	quadrillion or thousand billion or trillion

Numbers that are actual amounts of money, objects, people, etc., are usually spoken using the words shown above. For example, "304 cows" is spoken as "three hundred (and) four cows," and "$1,500" is spoken as "one thousand, five hundred dollars" or "fifteen hundred dollars."

Other types of numbers, such as numbers that are used for identification, in addresses, or in series, are often spoken in different ways. Any of the following may occur in speech: (1) zero may be spoken as

"oh" (that is, the same as the letter O); (2) "hundred" may be omitted; (3) each digit may be pronounced separately; (4) the first two digits of a four-digit number may be spoken as if they were a complete number. For example:

109	"one oh nine"
234	"two thirty-four" or "two three four"
2012	"twenty twelve" or "two oh one two"
3104	"thirty-one oh four" or "three one oh four"

ROMAN NUMERALS

Roman numerals were first used by the ancient Romans but are still sometimes used by English speakers to suggest age and tradition or for certain purposes. They are often used on monuments and on clocks; in numbered outline lists; at the beginning of paragraphs in complex documents; in copyright dates; for numbering sports events such as the Olympic Games; and for identifying kings, queens, popes, and children with the same name as others who came earlier.

FRACTIONS AND DECIMALS

Simple fractions are often spelled out in print.

1/10	one tenth or a tenth
1/5	one fifth or a fifth
1/4	one fourth or a fourth, one quarter or a quarter
1/3	one third or a third
3/8	three eighths
2/5	two fifths
1/2	one half or a half
3/4	three quarters
7/8	seven eighths
11/10	eleven tenths
1 1/2	one and a half or one and one half
12 1/4	twelve and a quarter or twelve and one quarter

The words in spelled-out fractions may be connected with hyphens: one-tenth, three-quarters, one-and-a-half, etc.

Decimal numbers are never spelled out in print. When they are spoken, the decimal point is always called "point," and each digit after the point is named separately.

.25	"point two five"
10.30	"ten point three zero"
42.597	"forty-two point five nine seven"
2.5 million	"two point five million"

Dates

In the U.S., full dates are normally written in the order month-day-year, with commas before and after the year.

The Titanic sank on April 15, 1912, southeast of Newfoundland.

In Britain, Australia, and Canada, month and day are usually in the opposite order, and no commas are used.

The Titanic sank on 15 April 1912 southeast of Newfoundland.

The same order used for full dates is also used when a date is written entirely in numbers. Thus, 6/8/08 means June 8, 2008, in the U.S., but in Britain and usually in Australia and Canada, 6/8/08 means August 6, 2008. Because of this difference, dates should never be written entirely in numbers when their meaning might be unclear. The International Organization for Standardization (ISO) has called for an all-numbers style in the order year-month-day; thus, June 8, 2008, would be abbreviated as 2008-06-08. The ISO style is widely used in technical contexts in all four countries.

In dates that include only the month and year, commas are omitted.

In October 2008 the factory closed.

In informal speech and writing, of is often inserted between the month and year.

We sold the house in January of 2001.

Century numbers may be either spelled out or written in digits.

in the nineteenth [or 19th] century

a 16th- [or sixteenth-] century painting

Decades are often called by a short name.

a song from the sixties [or '60s or Sixties]

The abbreviations B.C., B.C.E., and C.E. are placed after the date; A.D. is usually placed before a specific date.

1792–1750 B.C. or 1792–1750 B.C.E.

22 C.E. or A.D. 22

All four abbreviations follow the word century.

the 4th century A.D. or the 4th century C.E.

In speech, people often omit the word hundred from the names of years.

814: "eight fourteen" / "eight hundred fourteen"

1492: "fourteen ninety-two" / "fourteen hundred ninety-two"

1801: "eighteen-oh-one" / "eighteen hundred and one" / "eighteen one"

2013: "two thousand thirteen" / "two thousand and thirteen" / "twenty thirteen"

In both speech and writing, ordinal numbers (1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, etc.) are often used instead of cardinal numbers (1, 2, 3, 4, etc.), especially for dates that lack a year.

The package arrived on December 4th. = The package arrived on the 4th of December.

Holidays

This table shows the most important religious and nonreligious holidays in four English-speaking countries.

The abbreviation (g) marks public holidays set by the government. In the United States, these holidays are official only for employees of the federal government (although they are also observed by many businesses). In Canada and Australia, some government holidays are not observed in all provinces or states.

Most holidays associated with a particular date, such as Christmas, are celebrated on that date even when the actual holiday from work falls on the closest weekday. Some, such as Valentine's Day, St. Patrick's Day, Halloween, and Guy Fawkes Day, are almost never holidays from work.

Envelope Addresses

The first two or three lines of an address on an envelope have the same general elements in the United States, the United Kingdom, Canada, and Australia. The first line shows the name of the person receiving the letter, and the next line consists of a street address or post-office box number, as appropriate. In most cases, the street address has a street number followed by the street name. Additional information, such as the person's title or the company's name (for example, Universal Metrics, Inc.) can be entered on additional lines above the street address. The elements of the remaining address lines in each country are discussed below.

United States The name of the city or town, the two-letter state abbreviation, and the five-digit zip code are written on the same line. Every address has a unique four-digit number that is attached to the zip code (for example, 77269-2501), but these numbers are not used frequently.

Elizabeth Kingston Murray Universal Metrics, Inc.
357 East Madison St.
Houston, TX 77269
U.S.A.

United Kingdom The city or town name is written in all capital letters. The postcode consists of numbers and capital letters and is entered on its own line with one space between its two parts. A county name, not written in all capital letters, may be included on its own line below the postcode but is usually omitted. The name of the specific country within the United Kingdom—England, Scotland, Wales, or Northern Ireland—may appear in place of "United Kingdom" or "UK" as the last line of the address.

Mr. G. B. Robinson
Universal Metrics Ltd.
29 Edgbaston Park Rd.
BIRMINGHAM

England

Canada The name of the city or town, the two-letter province or territory abbreviation, and the postal code should be written on the same line. The six-character postal code consists of letters and numbers with one space between its two parts.

Jane MacAllister
Universal Metrics, Ltd.
249 Adelaide St. E., Suite 203
Toronto, ON M5A 1N1
Canada

Australia The city, town, or post-office name is followed by the state or territory abbreviation and the four-digit postcode, with one or two spaces between each of these parts. There is no punctuation on this line, and all letters are capitalized. When a country name is entered on the last line, it should be written in all capital letters.

E-Mail, Letters, Memos, and Résumés

E-Mail

Almost all business correspondence today uses e-mail.

Business e-mails should always include a subject line. This may let the other person know whether the message is urgent, and it will be valuable whenever either person needs to find the message in the future. When you answer a business e-mail, you should normally retain the subject line of the e-mail that you are answering.

Use the CC box to send copies to other people in your office who might be interested in the message. If you want to send a copy to someone without showing that person's name to the other people who receive the message, use the BCC box instead.

E-mail greetings, even in business correspondence, are usually quite informal. When writing to someone you do not know, always begin with "Dear Mr." or "Dear Ms." (for example, "Dear Mr. Nast:"). Business relationships in the U.S. now often become friendly and informal quickly, however. When the other person sends you an e-mail and signs it with his or her first name by itself, or uses your first name by itself in the greeting (for example, "Dear Martin,"), you may generally feel free to address him or her in that same way in your next e-mail. You may feel comfortable using "Hi" ("Hi Martin,") soon afterward. If the other person has a higher title than you, however, it is often better to remain formal in all your correspondence with him or her.

The language in the rest of the e-mail may also become quite informal. However, always be careful about using humor, since it often will not be understood properly.

A message should normally be limited to one subject. If you have two subjects to discuss, it is best to send two separate e-mails (with different subject lines). Keeping messages limited to one subject will make it easier for both you and the other person to file and find them.

If someone has written to you about several different subjects in a single e-mail, it may be best to write each separate response after the appropriate paragraph in the other person's message.

Use asterisks to emphasize a word or phrase (for example, "I meant the Philips account, not the Phillips account"). Using all capital letters ("I meant the PHILIPS account . . . ") can seem rude; any other kind of unusual type (such as boldface, italic, or underlining) may disappear when the message is sent.

Most business e-mails include a special ending (called a complimentary close) before the writer's name at the end. Somewhat formal ways of ending an e-mail include "Sincerely yours," "Yours sincerely," and "Best regards"; less formal options include "Sincerely," "Yours," and "Best." If you know someone well, your first name by itself may be enough, and very informal e-mails even omit the name. However, it is generally best to include at least an informal ending and your first name.

Subject: Lunch meeting

Dear Meg:

After so many phone conversations, it was delightful to finally meet over lunch on Tuesday. (And what a great lunch it was!)

If my notes are correct, my responsibilities at this point are basically as follows:

Review the Tomkins manuscript with an eye to its textbook potential.
Get a final decision from Ken Pascal on whether we'll be entering the bidding for the Perez translation.
Sound out WideWorld about a distribution arrangement for the Ghost Riders series.

Please let me know if I've forgotten anything. Otherwise, I'll be in touch to inform you of any progress.

Best regards,
Charlotte Gates

Letters

Business letters are usually more formal than e-mails. All business letters employ very similar formats.

Business letters are normally written on the company's official stationery (or letterhead). Any business letter that is not written on company letterhead should include the writer's address at the top, without the writer's name. The date comes next. Below the date comes the name and address of the person you are writing to, exactly as they will appear on the envelope (see Envelope Addresses, p. 1986). This is followed by the greeting (or salutation), which always begins with "Dear." When you write to a company or organization and you do not know the name of a particular person to address, you can address the company, organization, or department in general (for example, "Dear Merriam-Webster:").

Business letters end with a complimentary close, the writer's signature, the typed name, and often the writer's title. The common endings for letters, both formal and less formal, are mostly the same as those for e-mails.

Below is a sample letter from a retail hardware business.

May 7, 2008

Mr. David Lindberg Credit Manager
Harkins Hardware
100 Lake Street
Smithville, UT 84103

Dear Mr. Lindberg:

After meeting with you and inspecting your exhibit of ne carpenters' tools at the BTSE Convention in San Francisco last week, we have decided that we would like to carry your entire line of tools on a locally exclusive basis.

Please consider this letter an application for a charge account in the $5,000-$10,000 range. Credit references will be supplied upon request.

We are delighted to have the opportunity to handle the exclusive Harkins franchise in the Carson City area, and we look forward to building a healthy and pro table business relationship.

Very truly yours,

Howard Perretta

Memos

The office memo (or memorandum) is the normal way to send information within an office or company.

A standard memo uses four headings, often in this order: DATE, TO, FROM, SUBJECT (or RE). The heading CC may also be included after the subject line.

The memo omits three elements of the traditional letter (see Letters, p. 1990): the salutation, the complimentary close, and the signature. In place of a signature, the sender's handwritten initials may appear beside his or her name on the FROM line.

A memo may be addressed to one person, a few people, a department, or an entire office or company ("TO: Lily Martin," "TO: Customer Service Department," "TO: All Employees," etc.). If the memo is directed mainly to one or more people, but certain other employees may be interested in it as well, these others should be listed at the CC heading.

When writing a memo, state your purpose clearly at the beginning. Use bulleted lists where possible. Keep any courteous language brief.

Today most memos are sent by e-mail. A memo that is sent as an e-mail attachment may look exactly like a printed memo, even including the company's letterhead design.

DATE: May 4, 2008
TO: All Employees
FROM: R. T. Schmidt
SUBJECT: Summer Hours

I'm pleased to announce that our optional summer schedule will again be available from May 27 through September 30.

On Mondays through Thursdays, the workday will increase by one half hour. You may either reduce your lunch break by a half hour or add a half hour to your workday. On Fridays, you may leave two hours early.

Thus, Friday departure times, based on starting times, will be as follows:

Start	Leave
7:30 a.m	2:00 p.m.
8:00	2:30
8:30	3:00
9:00	3:30

Whenever you are planning to take a Friday as a vacation day, you should work regular hours on the preceding Monday through Thursday.

Here's to a great summer ahead!

Résumés

A résumé (or CV or curriculum vitae) is a summary of your qualifications for a job. Résumés are fairly standard in form, but there are many acceptable variations.

At the top of a résumé, you should state your name, mailing address, phone number, and e-mail address.

In English-speaking countries, you should not state your age, race, religion, height or weight, general health, or whether you are single or married.

If your education and training are especially strong or recent or relate very closely to the job you are seeking, they should be listed first. List each degree or certificate that you have earned, the school's name and location, and the year that the degree was granted.

If your work experience (or volunteer experience) is stronger or more relevant than your education, it may be listed before your education. Begin with your current job and then list any others that you want to include. For each job, state your title or function, the company and its location, and the years you worked there. You may want to briefly list your responsibilities and achievements. If you were not working during certain years, briefly explain why.

To help describe your life and personality, you may want to list your main activities and interests outside of work at the end of the résumé.

Most employers will want references (that is, statements about your abilities, character, etc.) from former teachers or employers before offering you a job. However, a résumé normally omits the names of such people and instead ends with the statement "References available on request."

The complete résumé should be only one or two pages long. Longer résumés usually are not read carefully by employers.

If you are applying for more than one kind of job, you may want to revise your résumé for each job application. If you save each version as a separate document on your computer, it will be easy to choose the version that is most appropriate for each application.

With every résumé that you send out, you should send a cover letter. This should state why you are applying for the job and should explain anything in the résumé that may seem odd to an employer. It may also mention anything important that you have done in your life that does not appear on the résumé. Cover letters should be no longer than one or two pages.

A résumé should normally be sent by ordinary mail. If the job advertisement you are responding to gives a fax number or an e-mail address, it should instead be faxed or e-mailed as an attachment.

The sample on the next page uses one of the most common résumé formats.
