A KOREAN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

INTRODUCTION

1. BACKGROUND. This dictionary was begun in 1953 as a research project of Yale University with the assistance of grants from the Program in Oriental Languages of the American Council of Learned Societies. Final preparation of this first edition was made possible by a subsidy from the U.S. Office of Education. We are grateful to Yale University Press and to Minjoongsugwan Publishing Company (Minchwung sekwan) for their cooperation in the difficult job of putting the work into print and for their understanding when the untimely death of Professor Yang Ha Lee delayed work on revising the proof. We are grateful to the Pacific and Asian Linguistics Institute of the University of Hawaii for assistance in the final proof revision.

2. SOURCES. When we began our compilation, we had access to only the first volume of the six-volume Khun sacen (Seoul 1947—57) of the Korean Language Society (Hankul hak-hoy); fortunately the remaining volumes were printed in time for us to make good use of them. We were aided by the earlier dictionaries of Lee Yuncay (Phyocwun Cosen-mal sacen, Seoul 1947), Mun Seyyeng (Cosen-e sacen, Seoul 1939), and J. S. Gale (Korean-English Dictionary, Seoul 1931). Two large dictionaries of great value appeared after we had completed our work: Kwuk.e t̃ay-sacen (Seoul 1961) by Lee Hiseung (Huysung) and Cosen-mal sacen (Phyengyang 1960—2) by the North Korean Academy of Sciences. We have been able to incorporate much additional information from those two sources, by revising and supplementing our material while it was in proof. In addition to the dictionaries mentioned, we have been helped by many other reference works, as well as by informants who have checked information and supplied us with examples.

3. COVERAGE. The emphasis in our dictionary is on the core of the language, and we have tried to give a full and accurate portrayal of the basic native Korean vocabulary. We have limited entries of Chinese loanwords to those more commonly useful, and we have not attempted to find exhaustive examples for each one; we have paid only cursory attention to recent European loanwords. A certain amount of encyclopedic information has been included for both general and linguistic interest, but we have not attempted systematic coverage of any technical field; we have checked our data against the best available secondary sources, but undoubtedly there are many errors. Dates for Korean kings — birth, beginning and end of reign, and death (when different from end of reign) — were kindly supplied by Professor Edward W. Wagner of Harvard University according to his system, which sometimes differs by a year from the usual Korean reckoning. We have tried to give a somewhat more extensive coverage of features of phonetic symbolism than that found in other dictionaries; entries are cross-referenced as “heavy” and “light” isotopes when vowel quality is exploited, as “intensive” and “para-intensive” when consonant strengthening is involved.

4. GRAMMAR AND SPELLING. The grammatical analysis which underlies the dictionary is that of Martin’s forthcoming Korean Reference Grammar, to which the reader is referred. We have strictly followed the spirit of the Hankul spelling conventions of the “Unified system” (Thōngil-an) of the Korean Language Society (the 1948 version revised from the original system of 1933), even when South Koreans currently diverge in usage, as they do when they omit the reinforcing sai sios in Chinese loanwords; but we have provided cross-references from other spellings likely to be met. Our Romanization incorporates morpho-phonemic features from both the Thōngil-an system and the system standardized in 1954 by the North Korean Academy of Sciences, which differs notably in the treatment of word-initial l- and n- and in writing all non-automatic reinforcement with an apostrophe that is equivalent to our Romanized -q-. Since we use a more generous system of word division in Romanization, the Romanized form often shows additional information about the structure of compound words. In our examples we have used liberal punctuation: a raised dot to set off particles and some postmodifiers [see below], a hyphen to show compounds of various sorts, and space followed by a hyphen to show initial abbreviation (indicated in Romanization by an initial apostrophe).

5. STANDARDIZATION. Although we have tried to adhere to the spirit of the spelling conventions of the Unified system, we differ from the grammatical analysis underlying that system — and the usual spellings in both South and North Korea — on a number of points:

- (1) We treat the copula (ita) as a separately spaced word, even when abbreviated ('ta).
- (2) We set off particles [and those one-syllable postmodifiers seldom followed by a particle or the copula] by a raised dot.
- (3) We treat ey se as a string of two particles rather than a single particle.
- (4) Many elements treated as unanalyzed endings by Korean grammarians are here identified as ending + particle (e.g. -e se, -e to, -e ya, -um ulo, -um a) or as modifier + postmodifier (e.g. -nun ya, -un i, -tun ci, -nun tey).
- (5) We follow Seoul speech in standardizing suta, phita, and khita in place of seta, phyeta, and khyeta; we equate -ten with -tun and deny the validity of the distinction between the two endings.
- (6) We treat the infinitive allomorph -a as standard only if the preceding vowel is o; if the preceding vowel is a, we write -e.
- (7) We treat the shortening of -oye (infinitive of bases that end in oy) as -ōy rather than -way, and so write tōy yo rather than tway yo.
- (8) For the infinitive of two-syllable (and longer) bases ending in ...i-, we recognize both the abbreviated form (...ye) and the full form (...ie); for one-syllable bases we generally prefer the full form.

6. ALPHABETIZATION. In alphabetizing the Hankul entries, we have followed the general conventions found in Khun sacen in not distinguishing double consonants from single consonants in initial position except for words that are otherwise homophonous, so that 딱딱 will be found between 닥닥 and 닥달; but we have kept the expected alphabetical slot for each of the final double-consonant spellings, so that 닭다 is between 딱-히 and 닭달(-질) rather than between 닥-나무 and 딱다깨비.

7. ETYMOLOGIES. We have indicated all known etymologies and suggested many new ones (often as queries). The word “compound” is used loosely throughout the dictionary to suggest that the reader may find further etymological help under the component parts. Many longer compounds are given simply as “examples” under main entries. Most of the Chinese binoms have not been marked as “compounds” since the components are often bound. But we have included all common bound nouns of Chinese [and pseudo-Chinese] origin in an initial entry under each homophone group, so that the inquisitive reader can look further into the etymology of most of the Chinese loanwords without leaving this dictionary. A Korean “tag-translation” reading is given for each of the bound nouns, together with the most common meanings found in compounds. We have included as entries most inflected forms of one or two syllables, since these are easy to confuse in an all-Hankul text.

8. PRONUNCIATION NOTES. When necessary, special notes have been added to call attention to pronunciations not predictable from the morphophonemic spelling. Vowel length, a remnant of an earlier system of pitch accent, is indicated (lexico-)phonemically rather than morphophonemically, for reasons to be explained elsewhere; the extreme difficulty of obtaining satisfactory data on vowel length has led to a number of inconsistencies which we hope to remedy in future editions. In our examples vowel length is generally not noted, unless the example is a simple lexical compound.

9. CITATION FORMS. Korean sentences come in three basic types: processive (those ending in a [processive] VERB), descriptive (those ending in an ADJECTIVE [= "descriptive verb"]), and nominal (those ending in the COPULA). We follow the usual Korean lexicographical convention in citing each processive verb both in the entry and in brief examples in the plain indicative assertive form (kata, mekta, sālta, etc.) even though that form is normally replaced in speech by the processive assertive (kanta, mek.nunta, sānta, etc.). But in citing examples translated as full sentences in English we use the processive form whenever appropriate. Corresponding to verbs and adjectives are [processive] VERBAL NOUNS and ADJECTIVAL NOUNS [= "descriptive verbal nouns"]; they make sentences with the aid of the base ha- which forms the auxiliary [processive] verb hanta 'does' and the auxiliary adjective hata 'is'. Some of the adjectival nouns that we have entered also as nouns are seldom (perhaps never) used except in adjectival-noun constructions; others occur more freely as subject, object, etc. We have departed from other bilingual dictionaries in giving most of the English translations in the third-person singular ("does/is") rather than the so-called "infinitive" (=to + unmarked form); this makes the translations more readily available for direct use in sentences, and corresponds more closely to the Korean forms translated.

10. FUTURE WORK. We recognize that this work has many shortcomings and we trust that it will be possible to improve it in future editions. Some minor variations of spelling and punctuation will be found both in the Korean and in the English, despite attempts to achieve consistency. We look forward to suggestions and corrections from those who may use the dictionary; we hope that it contains something of value for each user and we apologize for errors and infelicities which may cause inconvenience to our readers.

PRINCIPLES OF THE YALE ROMANIZATION

The Yale Romanization is designed to include all relevant morphophonemic information contained in either of the two spelling systems in use in North and South Korea, as well as a number of reminders of rules to be followed in converting the morphophonemic transcription to a phonemic one. Since the Romanization is intended to be easily written with any typewriter, no unusual symbols appear; instead digraphs (two familiar letters that are together treated as a single symbol) are used to write some of the vowels. The simple symbols u e a have been used for the basic back unrounded vowels; the back rounded vowels are written with wu (abbreviated to u after p, ph, pp, m, and y) and o. The high front vowel is written with i, but the other front vowels are written by following the back-vowel symbols with y to make digraphs: ey, ay, oy, and uy. In order to distinguish a sequence of back vowel + ya (or yay, ye, yey, yo, yu), a dot is written before the y that is not to be taken as part of a digraph: sa.yang, sa.yong, ce.yuk, o.yas, he.yeng, hwā.yem, etc. But the dot is unnecessary if the first vowel is preceded by y: kyōyuk and yūyong could each be interpreted only one way, with the second y beginning the second syllable. The dot is also used for three other purposes:

(1) to follow the Hankul spelling in showing the morphological divisions where these conflict with spoken syllables, as in iss.ess.e 'was', pronounced i-sse-sse;

(2) to indicate the reinforcement (unmarked in Hankul spelling) of certain endings after sonant bases, as in kēm.ta 'is black', reminding you to pronounce it /kēm^hta/, and sīn.ko 'wearing [shoes]', reminding you to pronounce it /sīn^hko/;

(3) to mark morpheme boundaries at places that call for automatic morphophonemic reductions and/or alternations (other than the cluster reinforcements of §9 in the Pronunciation Rules) as in noph.ta /noptta/ 'is tall', cōh.ta /cōtha/ 'is good', mek.nunta /mengnunta/ 'eats', ilk.nunta /ingnunta/ 'reads', etc. (For this third type, the dot is merely a reminder and can be omitted with no loss of information.)

The consonants are written p pp ph t tt th c cc ch k kk kh s ss h l m n ng. The digraph ng represents the velar nasal [ŋ]. Superscript letters are used to show divergences between the spelling systems used in North and South Korea; they can be omitted for purposes of pronunciation (see below) or representation of South Korean writing. For further details on problems of spelling and Romanization, see the forthcoming Korean Reference Grammar. In English contexts, we have used the Yale Romanization for most references to Korean names, but instead of Sewul and li we arbitrarily write Seoul and Lee [rather than I, Yi, or Li].

PRONUNCIATION RULES

From the morphophonemic form of a word as given by the Romanization (and by the Hankul spelling) it is possible to arrive at the actual pronunciation through a series of rules. The first set of rules (§§1—12) below converts the morphophonemic form to a phonemic representation of the word; the second set (§§13—24) converts the phonemic representation into a broad phonetic description, i.e. into rough directions to the articulatory organs. The arrow symbol here is to be read "convert (the form on the left to the form on the right)". We have omitted a number of rules that account for common variants, such as general dropping of h between voiced sounds, dropping of w after non-initial consonants, vowel raising, etc.

FROM MORPHOPHONEMIC FORM TO PHONEMIC REPRESENTATION

§1. SUPERSCRIPTS. Ignore superscript letters: lⁿ is pronounced the same as n, n^y and l^y are pronounced the same as y, lⁱ is pronounced the same as i. (The superscripts are to remind you of the North Korean spelling, which is usually — though not always — etymological.)

§2. REINFORCEMENT. Treat [vowel +] -q as [vowel +] nn before i or y: alayq i → /alaynni/. Treat [consonant +] -q as n before i or y: tesq i → tes ni → (§3) tet ni → (§6) /tenni/; kasq yang → kas nyang → (§3) kat nyang → (§6) /kannyang/; mulq yak → mul nyak → (§4) /mullyak/; pyelq il → pyel nil → (§4) /pyellil/.

§3. SYLLABLE EXCESS. Unless it ends in a vowel, a spoken syllable must end in one of the seven consonants p t k m n ng l. This means that morphemes which end in other consonants (or in consonant clusters) must be reduced to one of these seven, except when there is attached the copula (ita) or some particle or ending that begins with a vowel (such as i, ey, uy or -umyen, -un, -ulye).

| REDUCTION | EXAMPLE |
|-----------|---------------|
| ph } → p | iph → ip |
| ps } → p | kaps → kap |
| lp } → p | pālp- → pāp- |
| lph } → p | ulph- → up- |
| kk } → k | pakk → pak |
| kh } → k | puekh → puek |
| ks } → k | moks → mok |
| lk } → k | talk → tak |
| ls } → l | kols → kol |
| lth } → l | halth- → hal- |
| lh* } → l | alh- → al- |
| lm → m | sālm- → sām- |
| nc } → n | anc- → an- |
| nh* } → n | anh- → an- |

s } → t
ss } → t th } → t c } → t ch } → t h* } → t

nas → nat nass- → natnath → nat nac → nat nach → nat noh- → not-

*But if followed by an ending that begins with a single t, c, or k, the h metathesizes (rather than reduces): noh.ko → /nokho/, anh.ta → /antha/, alh.ci → /alchi/. And morpheme-final h (after vowel, n or l) is usually suppressed before a vowel: noh.a → /noa/, anh.e → /ane/, alh.e → /ale/.

NOTE: Some speakers reduce inflectional bases ending in lk-, lp-, lph-, and lm- to the lateral: ilk- → il- (rather than ik-), pālp- → pāl- (rather than pāp-), ulph- → ul- (rather than up-), sāl- → sāl- (rather than sām-).

§4. NASAL LATERALIZATION. Change n to l when contiguous to l: Sin.la → /silla/, il-nyen → /illyen/. Some speakers change all or many cases of -nn- to /ll/ as well.

§5. LATERAL NASALIZATION. When preceded by a consonant (other than l, §4) l is changed to n: sip-lyuk → sip-nyuk → (§6) /simnyuk/.

§6. NASAL ASSIMILATION. Before nasals (m n) the oral stops (p t k) are assimilated in nasality (→ m n ng): ip man → /imman/, mok man → /mongman/, os man → (§3) ot man → on man → (§7) /omman/.

§7. APICAL INSTABILITY. Before labial (p pp ph m) or velar (k kk kh) consonants, t and n assimilate in position of articulation (t → p or k, n → m or ng):

os puthe → (§3) ot puthe → /opputhe/os ppun → (§3) ot ppun → op ppun → (§10) /oppun/mōs phanta → (§3) mōt phanta → mōp phanta → (§10) /mōphanta/os man → (§3) ot man → (§6) on man → /omman/os kwa → (§3) ot kwa → /okkwa/os kkaci → (§3) ot kkaci → ok kkaci → (§10) /okkaci/os khenyeng → (§3) ot khenyeng → ok khenyeng → (§10) /okhenyeng/an kanta → /angkanta/an kkanta → /angkkanta/an khinta → /angkhinta/an ponta → /amponta/an ppanta → /amppanta/an phanta → /amphanta/

§8. ASSIBILATION. Before s(s) the apical stop t becomes s; before c(c) and ch it becomes c:

mōs santa → (§3) mōt santa → /mōssanta/mōs ssanta → (§3) mōt ssanta → mōs ssanta → (§10) /mōssanta/mōs canta → (§3) mōt canta → /mōccanta/mōs ccanta → (§3) mōt ccanta → mōc ccanta → (§10) /mōccanta/mōs chanta → (§3) mōt chanta → mōc chanta → (§10) /mōchanta/tat.so → /tasso/

tah.so → (§3) tat.so → /tasso/

§9. CLUSTER REINFORCEMENT. The single voiceless consonants p t c k s are reinforced (to pp tt cc kk ss) after a voiceless stop (mostly p or k, since except before itself t has been eliminated by §7 and §8):

sip-pun → sip-ppun → (§10) /sippun/

lyuk-pun → (§1) yuk-pun → /yukppun/

sip-to → /siptto/

lyuk-to → (§1) yuk-to → /yuktto/

ipci → /ipcci/

mekca → /mekcca/

ipko → /ipkko/

mek.ki → mek.kki → (§10) /mekki/

ipso → /ipsso/

mekso → /mekssso/

os to → (§3) ot to → ot tto → (§10) /otto/

§10. CLUSTER REDUCTION. Two like consonants are permitted only if not followed by h; three like consonants are not permitted.

| REDUCTION | EXAMPLE |
|-------------|---|
| pph → /ph/ | sip-phal → /siphəl/ |
| tth → /th/ | mōs thanta → (§3) mōt thanta → /mōthanta/ |
| kkh → /kh/ | mōs khinta → (§3) mōt khinta → (§7) mōk khinta → /mōkhinta/ |
| ccch → /ch/ | mōs chanta → (§3) mōt chanta → (§8) mōc chanta → /mōchanta/ |
| ppp → /pp/ | ip ppun → /ippun/ |
| ttt → /tt/ | mōs ttanta → (§3) mōt ttanta → /mōttanta/ |
| kkk → /kk/ | mok kkaci → /mokkaci/ |
| ccc → /cc/ | mōs ccanta → (§3) mōt ccanta → (§8) mōc ccanta → /mōccanta/ |
| sss → /ss/ | mōs ssanta → (§3) mōt ssanta → (§8) mōs ssanta → /mōssanta/ |

§11. PALATAL ASSIMILATION. Replace t(h) by c(h) before morpheme-initial i or y: kot.i → /koci/, path ita → /pachita/. (But titye = /titye/.) Replace t by c before morpheme-initial hi or hy: pat.hita → /pachita/, pat.hye → /pachye/. Many speakers suppress y after s, c, and ch: usye → /use/, kacye → /kace/, pachye → /pache/.

§12. ORTHOGRAPHIC VOWELS. The orthographic vowel uy is pronounced /u/ when initial, /i/ elsewhere: uyca → /uca/, huyta → /hita/, munuy → /muni/. But the particle uy is irregularly pronounced ey: nam uy cip → /nameycip/. The vowel oy is usually treated as /wey/ in Seoul, but some speakers treat both oy and wi as monophthongs (front rounded vowels [ö] and [ü]). The vowel yey retains its initial y only after juncture (i.e. phrase-initial): kyēysita → /kēysita/, phyēy → /phēy/, hyēyseng → /hēyseng/, sillyey → /silley/, mun-yey → /muney/.

FROM PHONEMIC REPRESENTATION TO PHONETIC ARTICULATION

§13. AIR STOPPAGE. The stops p t c k require total air stoppage at the appropriate points (§18). The lateral or flap l requires partial stoppage and the spirants s and h require sufficient obstruction to produce friction. All non-nasal sounds require the nasal passage to be stopped.

§14. BASIC VOICING. Vowels (including y- or w-), m, n, ng, and l require voicing, but note the following exceptions:

(1) Most speakers unvoice high vowels in an environment with h or s (or consonant + h or s) on one flank and p t c k s h on the other flank: pUchIca, khUta, sWIpsIita, chWUptta, slkkwu, hUkssayk, kUpssa, sWIita, sWIptta. But if there is only one vowel in the phrase it is usually voiced: sip, huk, swut; hak, thek.

(2) Some speakers unvoice the other vowels in the same environments: hAkssayng, sAYkssi, thOkki, thEpthEphAta.

§15. VOICING ASSIMILATION. The simple stops p t c k are often lightly voiced between segments that are voiced as a result of §14.

§16. RELEASE. Initial simple p t c k are released with local aspiration; simple s is released with either local or pharyngeal aspiration everywhere. Final p t k are unreleased.

§17. TENSION. All consonants are lax except when doubled. The double consonants (pp tt kk ss) are tense and pharyngealized; they are released with no aspiration.

§18. POSITION. The consonants are pronounced in the following positions:

| | | |
|---------------------|----------|-------------------|
| bilabial | p | m |
| dental | t | n l |
| alveolar or palatal | c | s |
| velar | k | ng* |
| pharyngeal | | h |

*But velar closure is imperfect or absent in rapid pronunciations of /ngi/, leaving a nasal palatal semivowel before the high front oral vowel i.

§19. PALATALIZATION. Before i or y most speakers palatalize s; some also palatalize ss. Although some speakers palatalize c only before i and y, many palatalize before all front vowels (i, ey, ay, oy, wi, wey, way), and most Seoul speakers palatalize c before all vowels. The lateral /l/ is generally palatalized before a consonant.

§20. NASALITY. The nasal passage is opened for m, n, ng.

§21. LATERALITY AND FLAP. The phoneme /l/ is pronounced as a lateral except: when it is single between vowels (ili, yelum, ōylay), between vowel and h even when the h is pronounced (palhayng, silhem, chil-ho), or initial (latio, leysutholang); in those environments l is a flap similar to the Japanese r.

§22. VOWEL QUALITIES.

(1) Front tongue position is required for i wi ey wey yey ay way yay oy.

(2) High tongue position is required for i wi u wu; but the position is somewhat lower when the vowel is checked by a consonant at the end of the syllable. Mid tongue position is required for ey wey oy e o, but many speakers have difficulty keeping front mid vowels distinct from low vowels, especially in non-initial syllables. Other vowels (ay way yay a wa ya) are low. High and mid vowels are generally higher when long and/or syllable final.

(3) Strong lip rounding is required throughout a syllable containing wu or o (and for some speakers wi and oy); for all speakers, a lip-rounded (=labial) glide is required at the beginning of wi, wey, way, we, wa.

(4) A front (=palatal) glide is required at the beginning of yey yay ye ya yu yo.

§23. VOWEL QUANTITY. Two like vowels are pronounced the same as a long vowel: aa = ā. (But many speakers suppress the length of non-double long vowels.) A one-syllable phrase that ends in a vowel is automatically lengthened, so that as cited words both to and tō sound the same.

§24. JUNCTURES. Junctures (=pseudo-pauses) are inserted to mark off major parts of a sentence; they are seldom inserted between parts of compound words or phrases, and almost never occur before a particle or the copula. In neither Hankul spelling nor the Romanization is space intended to represent juncture; only the grammar can tell you when to insert or suppress a juncture.

TABLE OF ROMANIZATION SYSTEMS

The following table shows how several systems differ in representing the Hankul symbols. Minor details in each system, such as the abbreviation of wu to u after labials in the Yale system, are not mentioned. "McCune-R." refers to the McCune-Reischauer system; "Lukoff" refers to the phonemic orthography used in Fred Lukoff's Spoken Korean; "1959-SK" refers to the system of the ROK Ministry of Education; "CK" refers to that of the North Korean Academy of Sciences (Cosen kwahak-wen), as reported in the 1957 Peking volume Pīnyīn wéncl xiěfǎ gūicè pp. 210—5.

ORDER OF ENTRIES

1. Consonant order:

| | | | | | | |
|--------|-----|------|------|------|------|-----|
| K ㄱ | N ㄴ | T ㄷ | L ㄹ | M ㅁ | P ㅂ | S ㅅ |
| -/NG ㅇ | C ㅈ | CH ㅊ | KH ㅋ | TH ㅌ | PH ㅍ | H ㅎ |

2. Vowel order:

| | | | | | | |
|-------|-------|------|-------|------|------|------|
| A ㅏ | AY ㅑ | YA ㅓ | YAY ㅕ | E ㅗ | EY ㅛ | YE ㅜ |
| YEY ㅝ | O ㅜ | WA ㅗ | WAY ㅛ | OY ㅝ | YO ㅟ | WU ㅢ |
| WE ㅟ | WEY ㅠ | WI ㅢ | YU ㅠ | U ㅡ | UY ㅢ | I ㅣ |

3. Initial double consonants are not distinguished in order from single consonants, except for words otherwise spelled the same. Final double consonants (whether geminate or not) are alphabetized according to the constituent letters: -k, -kk, -ks; -n, -nc, -nh; ... -l, -lk, -lm, -lp, -ls, -lth, -lph, -lh; ... -p, -ps; -s, -ss.

4. In a group of identical spellings, etymology generally determines the order of entries: native words precede Chinese loanwords, and other loanwords come last; but the list of Chinese bound nouns (i.e. those Chinese characters read with the syllable) precedes the native words. Vowel length is ignored in listing Chinese loanwords with identical spellings; the order is determined by the number of strokes in the first character used to write the word.

ㄱ [기역] K k [kiyek], n. 1. a letter of the Korean alphabet, 1st in the usual order, typically pronounced as a lax velar stop: in initial position, slightly aspirated [g̊]; in final position, unreleased [g̚]; between typically voiced sounds (vowels, y, w, m, n, ng, l), slightly voiced [g] or voiceless [g̊]. ¶ This sound is automatically replaced by ng before m, n, or a basic l; it drops before kk or kh. ¶ A final k sound is sometimes an automatic reduction of a basic kk or kh. 2. the 1st in an itemized series: A., a. [alpha], i., I., I° [primo]. SYN. 첫, 첫-째, 제-일, 갑. CF. 기역, 가. SEE ALSO ㅏ, ㅑ, ㅓ, ㅕ.

-ㄱ -k, suffix. 1. diminutive (especially in archaic and dialect words). ¶ 남 = 나무 (CF. 나막-신). ¶ 맑 = 마루. ¶ 돕 = 돌. ¶ 이력-저력 < 이려-저려 [? or < 이려고-저려고]. 2. makes nouns from verbs. ¶ 이룩- < 이루다. CF. -오; -악, -억 etc.

ㅏ [쌍-기역] Kk kk [ssang kiyek], n. a double letter of the Korean alphabet, usually treated as ㄱ in the order of the letters (except in listing words which would otherwise be homonyms) but sometimes given a separate place, usually after ㄱ. ¶ The letter is typically pronounced as a tense, unaspirated, slightly glottalized, voiceless velar stop. ¶ Final -kk is automatically reduced to k except before a particle or inflectional ending beginning with a vowel. The reduced k is subject to the same automatic alternations as a basic k. SEE 박, 꺾다, 꺾다, 꺾다, 낚다, 닦다, 덩다, 뭍다, 뭍다, 섞다, 속다, 엮다.

-ㅓ -ks Nouns which have basic shapes ending in ks reduce this to k except before a particle beginning with a vowel. The reduced k is subject to the same automatic alternations as a basic k. SEE 낚, 샅, 샅, 뭍. ㅓ kh → ㅋ.
