ㅋ [키읔] Kh, kh [khiukh], n. 1. a letter of the Korean alphabet, 11th in the usual order, typically pronounced as a lax voiceless velar stop with heavy aspiration (often velar-fricativized): [ʃ̰ː]. ¶ Morpheme-final -kh occurs only in 부엌-, 녀-, and 키읔-, and in these words it is heard only before a particle or ending beginning with a vowel, or before the copula 이다; in other environments the -kh is replaced by -k or a reflex of -k. Many speakers treat noun-final -kh as if it were -k. ¶ Words with kh are sometimes variants, or sometimes connotational synonyms (here usually called PARA-INTENSIVES), of corresponding words with k or kk. ¶ The sound kh is sometimes an automatic metathesis of a base-final -h with a suffix-initial k; thus 좋고 coh.ko sounds like 조코 cokho. ¶ The sound -kh- is frequently the automatic result of a combination of morph-final -k with morph-initial h; thus 식히다 sikhita 'makes chill' sounds like 시키다 sikhita 'causes, orders'. ¶ The combinations -pkh-, -mkh-, -nkh-, -ngkh-, and -lkh- all occur, but the expected combinations -tkh- and -kkh- usually reduce to a simple -kh-; thus 먹-칼 mek khal 'ink knife' sounds like 머칼 mekhal and 못-킨다 mōs khinta 'can't turn on lights' sounds like 모킨다 mōkhinta. ¶ The combination khi is often heard as chi in dialect pronunciations, especially those of the South, where kalukhita 'points out' and kalukhita 'teaches' are often not distinguished. 2. the 11th in an itemized series: K., ㄱ. ㅈ [티을] Th th [thiuth], n. 1. a letter of the Korean alphabet, 12th in the usual order, typically pronounced as a lax voiceless dental stop with heavy aspiration (often velar-fricativized): [tʰ]. 클릭 A morpheme-final -th is heard only before a particle or ending beginning with a vowel, or before the copula 이다; in other environments, the -th is replaced by -t or a reflex of -t. Many speakers treat noun-final -th as if it were -s. 클릭 In Seoul, a morpheme-final -th is pronounced ch before particles and endings beginning with -i and before the copula, so that 밭 이다 path ita 'it's a field' and 밭히다 pat.hita 'is butted' both sound like 밭치다 pachita, as does 밭치다 pat.chita 'supports'. 클릭 The combinations -pth-, -kth-, -mth-, -nth-, -ngth-, -lth- all occur, but the expected combination -tth- reduces to a simple -th-; thus 밭-타다 mōs thata and 밭-하다 mōs hata both sound like 밭타다 mōthata. 클릭 Words with th are sometimes variants, or sometimes connotational synonyms (here usually called PARA-INTENSIVES) of corresponding words with t or tt. 클릭 The sound th is sometimes an automatic metathesis of a base-final -h with a suffix-initial t-; thus 톡다 cōh.ta sounds like 톡타 cōtha. 클릭 The sound th is sometimes the result of joining a morpheme that ends in -t with one that begins with h-, so that 맏-형 mat hyeng 'eldest brother' sounds as if it were spelled *맏형 mathyeng. 2. the 12th in an itemized series: L., μ. [mu], xii., 12° [duodecimo]. syn. 열두-째, 제-십이. cf. 티을, 타.
